Official Reports of the Late Battle at Drury's Bluff.

FROM GEN. McCLELLAN'S ARMY.

WHITE HOUSE, Va., Monday, May 19.

The army commenced moving at an early hour this morning in the direction of Richmond, and will doubtless come miles in advance of this place. The advance, under Gen. SUMNER, reached the railroad bridge of the Chickahominy yesterday. It is a long wooden bridge, two spans only of which are burned. It can be rebuilt in a very short time. The pickets of the enemy are guarding the whole line of the river in front of Richmond, making it very difficult to obtain any reliable information from that city.

Gen. McCLELLAN went on a reconnoissance, to-day, to the Chickahominy.

The programme of operations in front of Richmond will soon be developed upon.

THE ADVANCE AT COLD HARBOR.

TUNSTALL'S STATION, Tuesday, May 20.

The advance, under Gen. SUMNER, reached Cold Harbor, on the road running to Richmond, by way of New Bridge, yesterday, where he found the enemy to be in force. He drove their pickets in to within two miles of their main body, and encamped for the night.

Everything indicates that the rebels intend to defend Richmond with all the available force they are able to bring forward. Congressmen and representatives from every Southern State are there, encouraging their troops by their presence and counsel to a determined resistance to an advance of the Union troops.

Cold Harbor, which has been reached by our cavalry, is less than ten miles northeast of Richmond, and is in the southern part of Hanover County, which adjoins Henrico County, in which Richmond is situated. It is not on the line of the railroad, but on a turnpike, which runs directly to the rebel capital. It would seem that Gen. McCLELLAN is extending his lines northward, preparatory to moving upon Richmond from that direction.—ED. TIMES.]

The two officers who came within our lines with a flag of truce about a week since on a trivial pretense, were allowed to return yesterday.

Commodore GOLDSBOROUGH paid a visit to headquarters last night, for the purpose of an interview with Gen. McCLELLAN.

The Richmond papers of the 16th have been received. They contain a correspondence between the Virginia Legislature and Jeff. DAVIS, in relation to removal necessary of the rebel army. He stated that he had always entertained the thought of withdrawing the army from Virginia, and abandoning the State; that if, in the course of events, the Capital should fall, the necessity of which he did not see, or anticipate, that would be no reason for withdrawing the army from Virginia. The war could still be successfully carried on and maintained on Virginia soil for twenty years.

The rebel General, JOHN B. FLOYD, has been appointed Major-General of the Virginia forces, with authority to raise a force of 20,000 men, now concentrated, for the defense of Western Virginia.

The engagement on Thursday, at Drewry's Bluff, seven miles below Richmond, between our gunboats and the enemy's batteries, on James River, produced a great panic among the people of Richmond. They acknowledge a loss of 6 killed and 7 wounded.

THE ACTION ON THE JAMES RIVER.

The following reports have been received at the Navy Department, from Commodore GOLDSBOROUGH:

REPORT OF COMMANDER ROGERS.

U. S. IRON-CLAD STEAMER GALENA,
OFF CITY POINT, JAMES RIVER, May 16, 1862.

SIR: I have the honor to report that this vessel, the Aroostook, the Monitor and Port Royal, with the Naugatuck, moved up the river, getting aground several times, but making no material improvements until we arrived at Ward's Bluff, about eight miles from Richmond, where we encountered a heavy battery, and two separate barriers, formed of piles and steamboats and sail vessels. The pilots both say that they saw the Jamestown and Yorktown among the number.

On the banks of the river we found lined with rifle pits, from which the enemy annoyed the men at the guns. These would hinder the removal of the obstructions, unless driven away by a land force. The Galena ran within about 800 yards of the battery, but now the spike-nail was deemed proper to go, let go her anchor, and with a spring swung across the stream, and once the twice as wide as the ship is long, and then, at 7:45 A. M., opened fire upon the battery. The wooden vessels, as directed, anchored about 1,200 yards below. The Monitor anchored near, and at 8 o'clock she passed just above the Galena, and found her guns could molder elevated enough to reach the battery. She then dropped a little below us, and made her shots effective. At five minutes after 11 the Galena had expended nearly all her ammunition, and I made signal to discontinue the action. We had but six Parrott charges, and not a single filled Grash shell. We had thirteen killed, and eleven wounded. The rifled 100-pounder of the starboard bank, half of the gun shaft the trunnions being overboard. She is, therefore, disabled. Lieut. SHARPE, the executive officer, was commended for his efficient and effective services. Mr. WASHBURNE, Acting Master, behaved gallantly. These are selected from among the number.

The Aroostook and Port Royal both the stations previously assigned them, and did everything that was possible. The Monitor could not have done better.

The barrier is such that the vessels of the enemy even, if they have any, cannot possibly pass out, and one cannot pass in.

I have the honor to be your obedient servant,

JOHN RODGERS,
Commander United States Navy.

REPORT OF LIEUT. JENVERS.

The following report of Lieut. Wm. N. JENVERS, commanding the Monitor, is addressed to Commander ROGERS:

U. S. IRON-CLAD STEAMER MONITOR,
JAMES RIVER, VA., May 16, 1862.

SIR: I submit the following report of the movements of this vessel during the action of yesterday. Shortly after weighing anchor from our position near Kingsland Creek, a sharp fire of musketry was commenced from both banks on all the ships. At 7:34 o'clock I discovered an extensive fortification on an elevation of about 200 feet, with several smaller batteries, all apparently mounting guns of the heaviest calibre. At the foot of the bluff in the river there is an obstruction formed of sunken vessels and steamers secured with chains, and the shallow water piled across the river.

The Galena, having anchored at about 1,000 yards distant from the fort, and being warmly engaged, I endeavored to pass ahead of her and take off some of the fire, but I found that my guns could not be elevated sufficiently to point at the fort. I then took position on the line with the Galena, and maintained a deliberate fire until the close of the action, when, in company with the other vessels, I dropped down to the anchorage.

The fire of the enemy was remarkably well directed, but visibly toward this vessel. She was struck three times—one solid eight-inch shot square on the turret, and two solid shot on the side armor forward of the pilot-house. Neither caused any damage beyond bending the plates. I am happy to report no casualties.

In conclusion, permit me to say the action was most gallantly fought against great odds, and with the usual effect against earthworks. So long as our vessels kept up a rapid fire, they rarely returned our fire, but the moment our fire slackened, they resumed their guns. It was impossible to reduce such works except with the aid of a land force.

REPORT OF LIEUT. CONSTABLE.

The following report of Lieut. D. C. CONSTABLE, commanding the steamer E. A. Stevens (Naugatuck,) is dated May 16, and is addressed, as are the others, to Commander ROGERS:

SIR: I have the honor to report that in yesterday's attack upon the enemy's battery at Ward's Hill, near Richmond, Va., I placed the vessel under my command in the position assigned me by you in the line of attack, and opened fire upon the battery, which I continued until the bursting of our gun. Whilst getting into position, during the bombardment, and while falling back with the squadron, this vessel was under quite a heavy fire of musketry, which was constantly returned by us with shell and canister from our light broadside guns.

I have likewise to report to you that two of my crew are wounded, one by a musket shot through the arm, and the other by a severe contusion. They have been sent on board the Port Royal for surgical treatment. My officers and crew behaved to my entire satisfaction.

I would respectfully request that you appoint a Board of Officers to examine into and report upon the cause of the bursting of our Parrott gun.

THE KILLED AND WOUNDED.

The following is the report of Assistant-Surgeon VAN GIESON, of the Galena, giving the account of the killed and wounded in the late action at Ward's Bluff.

FURTHER PARTICULARS ON THE CONTEST.

Correspondence of the Philadelphia Inquirer.

FORTRESS MONROE, Sunday, May 18.

The great anxiety which has prevailed here for a week past to hear from the expedition up the James River, has at last been gratified.

This afternoon the little Naugatuck was descried coming down the Roads, and immediately the anxious ones hurried to the beach to ask whether "the Monitor was shelling Richmond?" Having conversed with one of the officers of the Naugatuck, I am enabled to give you the following interesting particulars:

Last Sunday morning the Monitor, Galena and Naugatuck started for the rebel capital via the James River. They were soon followed by the Aroostook and Port Royal.

They silenced several of the batteries which lined the shore, and passed some with the most contemptuous silence.

The Captain of the Monitor stood upon the turret and waved his cap to a battery which he considered unworthy of the notice of his pet, although three balls struck the Monitor's turret with considerable force.

The progress of the fleet was a continued success until they arrived to within about seven miles of Richmond. Here the river takes a sharp turn around a precipitous bluff, fully a hundred and fifty feet in height. Upon the top of this bluff the rebels have erected a most scientific and formidable battery, mounting guns of superior range and calibre. This battery commands the river in the most effective manner, and it soon became evident to our fleet that an engagement of no ordinary character was imminent.

At last Thursday morning, at 7 o'clock, our fleet formed their line of battle and commenced the reduction of the rebel stronghold. From the unusual elevation of the battery, and the difficulty our men experienced in getting the proper range, they were, for a time, unable to do any execution. In the meantime the battery poured an incessant fire of shell and ball down upon the decks of our vessels, and did a fearful work.

The Naugatuck, after several brilliant shots, burst her 100-pound rifled Parrott gun; killing the gunner and wounding several others. Having no other armament except two boarding howitzers, and being thus disabled, she withdrew from the engagement.

The Galena suffered severely; the rebel shots riddling her deck with great ease, and several of the balls entering her side. Fourteen of her crew were killed and thirteen wounded; the majority of the latter, however, will recover. Those who were killed are terribly cut and mangled—some beyond the hope of recognition. For one hour the Galena was exposed to the entire fire of the rebel battery. On account of the narrowness of the channel, she could not "spring" or turn so as to work to advantage.

The Monitor, however, maintained her superior strength and invulnerability. The balls glanced harmless from her tower of strength and fell into the placid waters of the river. For some time she labored under great difficulty in acquiring the requisite elevation for her guns. But having once obtained it, she poured her missiles with fearful effect upon the battery, and thus encouraging her associates, the fleet belched forth such an iron hail that the battery was silenced for three-quarters of an hour. At this juncture our vessels ran short of ammunition, and retired from action, while the rebels renounced their guns and again commenced the conflict. A portion of the fleet came down the river to Jamestown Island, nearly opposite Williamsburgh.

The Monitor and Galena remained, in order to keep the rebels awake, the Monitor firing pretty regularly once in two minutes, fully sustaining the reputation of the "cheese-box." The Aroostook and Port Royal were not materially injured. The action lasted four hours and a half, constituting one of the most brilliant of the war.

About a quarter of a mile further up the river the rebels have made a strong barricade to the further progress of a hostile fleet. They have sunk the Yorktown and Jamestown in the channel, and driven immense piles from one side of the river to the other, forming a stockade similar to that in the entrance to the Norfolk harbor.

The guns of the battery are said to be manned by the remnants of the crews of the Merrimac, Yorktown and Jamestown. The firing was excellent, showing a great deal of skill.

The Naugatuck escaped serious injury, by having her pilot-house and deck protected by iron rails, laid transversely.

The body of Mr. SEMPLE, gunner of the Galena, has been brought here for interment.

THE DESERTION OF THE LOWER BATTERIES.

REPORT OF COMMODORE GOLDSBOROUGH.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, May 20.

The following has been received at the Navy Department:

UNITED STATES FLAGSHIP SUSQUEHANNAH,
JAMES RIVER, VA., May 16, 1862.

SIR: In consequence of a report from Commander ROGERS that there were two batteries on the south side of this river, one at Rock Wharf Landing, and the other at Harding's Bluff or Mother Fine's Landing, which required reducing in order to open the river to get supplies up to him, of which he was about to stand in need, I moved up to them yesterday with this ship, the Wachusett, the Dacotah, Maratanza and the tug Young America, but found that both had been recently abandoned and left comparatively in a useless condition. At Harding's Bluff the guns were spiked, carriages burnt and magazines blown up; but a little below it, a solitary gun remained intact, and this we put out of use. At Rock Wharf Landing the guns were also spiked, and the carriages burnt, but neither the magazines nor bomb-proofs had been destroyed. This I ordered to be done, and it was effectually accomplished.

The James River is now open from its mouth up to Ward's or Drury's Bluff, or, in other words, up to eight miles of Richmond, where, as you will perceive by Commander ROGERS' report of his fight, it is seriously obstructed.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

L. M. GOLDSBOROUGH,
Flag-Officer Commanding North Atlantic Blockading Squadron.

Hon. GIDEON WELLES, Secretary of the Navy.

HOW THE GALENA WAS MANŒUVRED.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, May 20.

A private letter from officer CADY, of one of the vessels belonging to Commodore ROGERS' flotilla, speaking of the recent engagement, says:

"The Galena, iron-clad, was admirably maneuvred—so beautifully and exactly that she passed five or six times as close as she could get, and silenced one of the batteries. She then passed and repassed the second battery six times, but finding they were using so much ammunition for which we expect to have better use higher up, Commander ROGERS ordered the wooden vessels to run up, whilst he, in the Galena, lay abreast of the battery and disconcerted the rebel gunners. The Galena then followed, but the buoys have been displaced and misplaced, so that the pilots last evening run the Galena ashore, and she is still aground. None of our vessels were seriously injured."

OPERATIONS ON THE PENINSULA.

OUR CORRESPONDENCE FROM THE ADVANCE.

The Battle of Williamsburgh—A Spirited Speech from Gen. McClellan.

WHITE HOUSE, Va., Friday, May 16, 1862.

The following is the speech made by Gen. McCLELLAN to the Seventh Maine Regiment, Col. MASON, which, with the Thirty-third New-York, made, under Gen. HANCOCK, that "brilliant bayonet charge" that closed the engagement, and gave our army the victory:

"SOLDIERS: I have come to thank you for your good conduct and gallantry. On that little plain you saved our army from a disgraceful defeat. You would have deserved equal praise had you been overwhelmed by the masses that were hurled against you. You deserve the highest thanks of your country, and your State should justly be proud of you. Bear upon your colors the inscription, 'Williamsburgh,' in token of your bravery, and as the highest honor that I can confer upon you.

Soldiers, my words are feeble, but from the bottom of my heart I thank you."

The speech to the Thirty-third New-York was substantially the same.

Rainy Weather—Changes in Divisions—Two New-York Captains Under Arrest.

CAMP NEAR WHITE HOUSE, Thursday, May 15, 1862.

That old, but not desirable acquaintance of the army of the Potomac, rainy weather, has again come with all of its attendant miseries of muddy roads, chilling winds, and gloomy influences. To an army on the march or in camp, the weather imparts, to a great degree, something of its own nature. If warm days and genial skies prevail, you are certain to find a cheerful camp or a light-hearted column; but when these dismal skies and pitiless rains overshadow everything with their dreariness, you will look in vain through camp or column for anything but heartsick or homesick soldiers. I commence this communication in a tent on which the rain comes pattering like a volley of very faint musketry, while the thorough drenching incurred by a horseman's ride makes me shiver like an aspen leaf. I peep through the opening of the tent and see thousands who are coming up from Cumberland Landing completely saturated with the falling element, who have no tents for shelter, and I congratulate myself on my better fortune—in short, feel contented.

The three days just passed have not been very prolific of incident or news, and consequently have been dull to both the army and army correspondents. The arrangement of divisions and corps has been changed and the main body of the army been placed in positions more concentrated. It will hardly be necessary to refer to the fact that this camp is at the point where the railroad from West Point to Richmond crosses the Pamunkey. Transports come with ease thus far up, and one, I am told, go still above this. We are encamped on the beautiful White House farm, once belonging to the Custis estate. It was at this same place that WASHINGTON is said to have wooed and won his bride. Like almost every acre of this historic peninsula there is much that tradition or history has associated with it to make it an object of great interest. A beautiful field of clover belonging, it is said, to Gen. LEE, furnishes forage for our horses. One of the many camp rumors of the day is that the rebel General has sent word to Gen. McCLELLAN to vacate or he will commence an action of trespass or some other kind of action. This will be the last depôt made before the final advance on Richmond. In the present confusion incident to the moving and rearranging the different divisions, it is difficult to conjecture when that final advance will be made, and, of course, did we know, it would be contraband to reveal.

Of the position of the enemy I have many contradictory statements. They undoubtedly have a portion of their army still on this side of the Chickahominy—probably acting as an army of observation. It is certain that they have been industriously at work on the other side, and distant fifteen miles from Richmond, throwing up earthworks. It is thought that they in no event can make their works there as formidable as were those at Yorktown, but still they may sufficiently fortify to render the use of siege guns necessary. The swampy surroundings of their new pair will be a difficult obstacle in the way of our army, but one which can be overcome. With many in prominent position in the army the opinion finds favor that the rebels will not hazard a battle, even with the odds they hold, but will try to make safe their retreat to some point farther South. This opinion is based partly on the reports brought in by deserters and contrabands, and partly on the inference drawn from their evacuation of Yorktown.

It by no means follows that because they gave up their strong works at that place that they will continue to retire without offering battle.

There are advantages for them to gain which will compensate them for the abandonment of their first stronghold. They have had time to add, if desired, to their number from the smaller forces in quarters beyond Richmond. Beside, we must give them credit for possessing some knowledge of strategy, and the opinion gains ground that they are exercising it. If a general engagement is to be had this side of Richmond, good generalship alone will determine its issue. Their force is, or can be, superior to ours; they will fight desperately to save Richmond, and being met in the same spirit by our troops, it will be left to the best generalship in seizing the advantages of position or in the disposition of forces, to win the day.

Local camp news, of sufficient importance to put in print, is a scarcity to-day. Two Captains of a New-York regiment were recently put in irons by Gen. SUMNER for mutinous conduct, in refusing to bring out their companies at parade. The cause given for the mutiny was the arranging, according to rank, the various companies in the regimental line, by which some were displaced from the position previously occupied. The Captains were placed in irons and sent to headquarters, where, if the charges are sustained, the fullest severity of military punishment will be summarily meted out to them. I forbear to mention either the names of the officers or the regiment, until such time as it is officially shown that the men are guilty.

The rigorous enforcement of orders against foraging, sometimes better known as pillaging, has astonished many who had lightly counted upon its consequences. Even an official, who performs the double duty of leading a regiment in the field and a committee in the forum, was stirred out of his complacency by a request to attend to an "investigation" relative to a mule contract, in which he was not expected to preside. It is looked upon as an excellent joke on the Colonel, especially as the circumstances attending it are said to be such as to fully exonerate him from all blame. W. W. C.

A Virginia Court-House—Its Characteristics—Paucity of Union Sentiment—Army Depredations—The Case of Col. Van Wyck—Cumberland Landing—Important Reconnoissances.

NEW-KENT COURT-HOUSE, VA., Friday, May 16, 1862.

New-Kent Court-house is a type of all the county seats I have met with thus far in Virginia; half-a-dozen wooden houses clustering about a brick Court-house and jail, a post-office, a tavern and a country store. Five families constituted the population of this place, and they are still represented by the other members and the females, the young men having disappeared with the general draft the Southern army has demanded. The jail and store of New-Kent are now but a mass of ruins, having been burnt by the rebel authorities at their evacuation. They contained corn, and the order was to destroy this, which the rebel soldiers took the readiest way of doing by destroying buildings and all. The tavern now does double duty, as a prison and a hospital, our sick soldiers occupying the upper part, and two Confederate officers being confined in the basement.

THE BURDENS OF VIRGINIA.

The tavern, though but a rude, unfinished looking building, is of interest, in its way, as the centre about which the scattered population of the country has been accustomed to gather. In its bar-room the local great men have met over their pipes and whisky to discuss the coming crop and talk politics, thus nursing their local pride until exaggerated notions of State Rights have finally wrought their ruin, desolating their homes, and sweeping away their possessions with the rude passage of a war, for which their own acts have helped to open the way. Virginia bears a heavy responsibility for this rebellion, which her efforts might have stayed, and heavily is she paying for her mistake—her crime. The theatre of strife, the battlefield of contending armies, she has borne more than her share of the burdens of the Confederacy, and now groans in prospect of a submission to the just requirement of the authority she has defied and outraged. Whether it be the suggestions of a guilty conscience or the mistake of a deluded people, there is a false notion among her citizens that the whole expenses of the war are to be laid upon the South, and the people of that section dripped of their property and reduced to Slavery to pay the debt. I heard an intelligent resident of this neighborhood make such a complaint to Gen. CASEY this morning, and such is undoubtedly a common impression, which has its share in the motive inducing the hard-pressed rebels to prolong resistance.

If there is much hearty Union sentiment in Virginia I have failed to meet with it. At the best, it is as in this town, where the people seem disposed to submit with patience to what is inevitable, and yield quietly to the rule they are in no condition to contend against. Still, their case is apparently one which will yield to kind and judicious treatment, though the first experience of subjection is not the time for developing healthy symptoms. An army is never a love-provoking institution, and there are inconveniences and trials attending the presence of the best intentioned troops, which makes their occupation irritating to a community. It is natural that men whose wheat fields have been trampled down, whose stores and stock have strangely disappeared, and whose slaves have acquired sudden notions of independence, should not see, at a glance, the blessings of Union and the fatherly love which is working their emancipation from the tyranny of secession. But it is ever the habit of the patient to make wry faces at the drugs which are working his ease; and we need hate nothing of heart or hope on their account.

Many of the complaints of depredations on the part of our army are, no doubt, exaggerated, if not wholly false; but it cannot be denied that the most liberal allowances on this score will still leave much connected with the passage of our troops that is to be regretted. Strict individual honesty is not the virtue of armies, and there are, moreover, some too convenient notions on the subject of rebel right to property current among our troops, which the authorities are making a vigorous endeavor to eradicate. They will succeed, if earnest and impartial effort promises success. For the just recognition of the principle of respect for private property, they are entitled to commendation, though it may be that, in individual instances, they have drawn taut the reins of authority too suddenly, visiting simple mistakes with the punishment of crimes. Col. VAN WYCK, of the Fifty-sixth New-York, (M. C.,) is among those who have suffered in this way, finding himself under arrest in consequence of some well-intentioned efforts to provide for his sick and hungry soldiers by making use of property to which, as he conceived, the United States had acquired a good title. The Colonel is especially careful to see that his men are well looked after, and it is to be regretted that his kindness of heart should have led him into any difficulty with the Provost-Marshal. The matter is fortunately now in a fair way of adjustment, and Col. VAN WYCK is already released from the stigma of any intentional violation of the army regulations.

It is about ten miles through the woods from this point to Cumberland, which is simply a landing on the Pamunkey, though one possessing natural advantages which at the North would make it the seat of a thriving city. The river in there divided by an island, the main channel being about four or five hundred feet in width, and having a depth, it is said, of sixty feet close in shore. From the water a magnificent plain of two thousand acres of cleared land stretches off to the woods bounding it in the distance. This is the property of man named TOLAND—or rather of his wife—whose few storehouses and slave-huts on the water's edge constitute the entire settlement of Cumberland.

The Toland residence overlooks the plain from a high hill, which rises abruptly at one side, affording precisely such a view of the 2,000 acre farm below as one gets of a level half-acre floor from the high gallery at his seat. As I looked down from this point upon the forces encamped in the wheat-fields below, I thought it must have been from such a position that XERXES reviewed his army of a million of souls before he led them forth to battle.

TOLAND is a slave-breeder; on his plantation you have the institution presented in one of its worst aspects. With him human beings have been literally treated as cattle, his whole stock of seventy-odd slaves averaging from a single woman, who now, at less than sixty years of age, finds herself surrounded by three generations of offspring, without ever having been bound by the marriage relation to thwart the purposes of her master in his anxiety to improve his stock. Mr. TOLAND proposes to dispose of his entire to me for $20 an acre, providing that I would take his slaves off his hands at a low price, saying that he is getting too old to farm. I might have been disposed to consider the proposition had not my brief experience in Virginia convinced me that "niggers are mighty unsettle property." But few, indeed, are left to yield to the seductions of freedom which the presence of a Northern army bring, those left behind being mainly those who are either too old or too young to be subject to temptation.

We remain inactive in the portion of the army at this place, no enemy appearing near enough to tempt us to effort. A reconnoissance made by Gen. PIKE this morning, four or five miles beyond here, toward the Chickahominy, revealed traces of two rebel regiments, who had apparently encamped last night on this road to Richmond, toward which they must have withdrawn. SATURDAY, May 17—A. M.

A reconnoissance was made yesterday by Capt. GRAHAME, of the Eighth Illinois Cavalry, who advanced with twenty men seven miles beyond here on the road to Richmond, crossing the Chickahominy at Bottom's Bridge. There they met with the Sergeant and Adjutant of the First Virginia Cavalry, the first of whom was taken prisoner by Lieut. SMITH, the Adjutant escaping to the woods. In chasing these two men Capt. GRAHAME came with his handful of men upon a squad of thirty rebel horsemen, who were driven in on a larger body of 120, supported by a force of some 2,500 men, two or three miles further toward the Chickahominy. It is supposed that the rebels have a strong rear guard in this direction, and a reconnoissance in force is to be made by Gen. COUCH'S Division this morning to ascertain the strength of the enemy. The prisoner taken by Lieut. SMITH reports that one of their men was wounded by Capt. GRAHAME'S Cavalry, and another is supposed to have suffered from their attack, as a second horse was seen without a rider. None of our men were injured.

PIERREPONT.

The First New-Jersey Regiment to the Battle of West Point—The Importance of the Victory.

FRANKLIN'S CORPS D'ARMEE,
WHITE HOUSE, Va., Friday, May 16, 1862.

Passing from New-Kent Court-house I came to Cumberland, and thence to this point. The advance consisted of Gen. SUMNER'S cavalry command, supported by the First New-Jersey volunteers, infantry, commanded by Col. ALFRED T. A. TORBERT, and the Second New-Jersey volunteers under Col. ISAAC TUCKER, being part of the First New-Jersey Brigade, lately commanded by KEARNEY, but now under Brig. Gen. Geo. W. TAYLOR, recently the energetic Colonel of the Third New-Jersey Regiment.

While speaking of these troops I ought to direct attention to the behavior of the First New-Jersey Regiment at the affair at West Point. Several accomplished military men of other brigades have spoken of the steady bearing of this regiment when ordered to support the New-York Thirty-first, then under fire in the woods. The line was as firm as a division in its column at a review. Not a man flinched. Col. TORBERT, division officer of the day, being called to various points, and having special command of the grand guard, Lieut.-Col. RENZIE McALLISTER took command. On entering the woods Major HAZELTON, to prevent a flank movement, was sent to the right with two companies, while Col. McALLISTER moved forward, receiving a volley from the rebels which they returned, and, in the next moment, charged upon the enemy who broke and fled. McALLISTER bravely pursued them some distance, when he received orders to return and hold the fence which ran across the forest.

This firm and determined movement decided the result. The rebels made good their retreat. Pursuit was out of the question, as but one passage was at all practicable, and this was through a dense wood, exposing the few who might get through first to certain destruction.

Had the entire command of FRANKLIN reached West Point sooner, or rather, had not the haste of the enemy been so great, their retreat would have been effectually cut off. As it was, the position was held against superior numbers, and against the determination of the rebel General to drive them to their transports. A disaster here to our arms would have been of immense advantage to them. As it was, we repulsed them effectually, and gave them new motives to hasten to safer regions.

One word here, with reference to the accomplished "TORBERT." Educated at West Point, and made Captain in the regular army at the early age of 20 years, he was appointed by Gen. CLARK, of New-Jersey, to succeed Col. MONTGOMERY, (promoted to the Brigadership,) in the command of the First New-Jersey Regiment. Dignified and gentlemanly, prompt and energetic, brave and of unerring judgment, together with a military training of the highest order, give, in him, the earnest of great usefulness to our country, and need only be known to place him in the highest positions.

Gathered at this point is an army wonderful to behold, the characteristics of which, however, can be imagined by your readers, and must not be described by your correspondent.

We are now encamped on the beautiful grounds of Col. WM. FITZHUGH LEE, of the Virginia Rebel Mounted Rangers, son of Gen. ROBERT E. LEE, of the rebel army. This plantation comprises about 7,000 acres, much of which is in a high state of cultivation, and over 150 slaves are here dwelling in their humble huts, and living on bacon and corn meal. A good head of stock were found here, embracing horses, sheep, cows, hogs, and large quantities of grain, &c. The family left here last Friday, for Richmond.

The railroad to Richmond from West Point, here crosses the river. It seems to have been mutilated on this side by the rebels, who were enlisted with burning the bridge which crossed the Pamunkey. Here is being formed a grand depôt, and from this point, with concentrated and increased energy, will soon go forth the power that shall overthrow Secession. R. D. T.

IMPORTANT FROM THE GULF.

News from New-Orleans to the 6th Inst.

Affairs There Progressing Favorably.

Porter's Mortar Fleet Preparing to Attack Mobile.

Particulars of the Evacuation of Pensacola.

FORTRESS MONROE, Tuesday, May 20.

The United States dispatch Rhode Island, Capt. TAPPAN, arrived here this morning with the mails and dates from New-Orleans to the 8th, South West Pass to the 9th, Ship Island to the 10th, Pensacola to the 11th, Key West to the 14th, and Port Royal to the 15th.

Among the passengers from New-Orleans are Col. DUNCAN, of the Twelfth Connecticut, bearer of dispatches from Gen. BUTLER, Capt. ALFRED H. BAILEY, of the gunboat Wissahickon, and A. G. HUNT, correspondent of the Boston Journal; also between forty and fifty passengers, naval officers, captured on the Mississippi, below New-Orleans. Among these are several late Lieutenants of our navy, including J. K. MITCHELL, commanding Confederate naval forces on the Mississippi; G. W. WHITMORE, second in command on board the Louisiana; SEYMOUR CONRAD, of the Gen. Moore, destroyed; and R. F. WALKER, commanding the ram Manassas. On the passage the passengers were obliged to take their turn doing guard duty over the prisoners.

The news from New-Orleans is not of special interest; Gen. BUTLER commenced landing on the 1st of May; established his headquarters at the Custom-house; took possession of the City Hall, Mint, &c., and compelled the St. Charles Hotel, which was closed, to open, for the accommodation of officers and staff. A conference had been had between Gen. BUTLER and the authorities of the city, with Prince ROZAN. The proclamation was discussed, and modified in some particulars.

As an act of humanity to the suffering inhabitants, the boats and railroads were allowed to bring supplies to the city. Negotiation for Confederate scrip is forbidden, but other species of currency is allowed. The newspapers continue their publication. The Delta was suppressed for refusing to publish the proclamation, but subsequently allowed to go on. Algiers has been occupied by our forces, and Forts Jackson and St. Philip garrisoned by our troops from Ship Island.

The Opelousas and Jackson Railroad was taken possession of, and all the appurtenances to the city seized. Gen. PRATT had advanced to Carrollton, five miles up the river, and occupied the place. There was very little public demonstration of Union feeling in consequence of the uncertainty in reference to the future, a great want of confidence prevailing; but, under the firm course of Gen. BUTLER, business is slowly reviving. The city is gradually becoming quiet, and affairs generally are perfectly satisfactory.

It is stated that PORTER'S mortar fleet had been off Mobile and in the Bay, and soundings had been made in the channel. On the 7th the fleet was fired on while engaged in this work, by Fort Morgan, but no reply was given. The fleet afterward returned to Ship Island.

On the night of the 9th the enemy evacuated Pensacola, and set fire to the forts, Navy-yard, Barracks and Marine Hospital. Gen. ARMES commenced a bombardment when the destruction of property was begun, with the hope of saving a portion of the forts and property. The steamers Dodgers and Sloop were burned.

Fort McRee, the hospital and Navy-yard, were destroyed. The barracks were saved, as were also the foundry and blacksmith-shop in the Navy-yard. The city and forts had been occupied by Gen. ARMES with three thousand troops. Gen. ARMES was to establish his headquarters in the city on the 15th, and occupy the city with twelve hundred men.

There is nothing of importance from Key West or Port Royal.

Some few days ago the gunboat Wachusetts lost two men in a skirmish in Warsaw Sound.

Rebel Cavalry Broken up near Strasburg—Operations of Col. Geary Against Them, &c.

STRASBURG, Monday, May 19.

It is currently reported and credited in military circles that 2,000 rebel cavalry, attached to different commands, have been disbanded and formed into guerrilla bands, occupying the various mountain passes and fastnesses. Col. GEARY, a few days since, learned that these bands were in a cave five miles from Rectortown, and made arrangements to surround and capture them. On reaching the cave he ascertained they had vacated it the previous day. Horses and horses had evidently been there some time, the former living exceedingly, judging from the empty bottles, boxes, cans, etc. It is probable they were a portion of the force which surprised GEARY's guard-train near Linden, last week, and retreated towards Warrenton on Gen. BANKS' approach.

Col. GEARY has been ordered to report to Gen. BANKS in future. He has been relieved from guarding the lower part of the Manassas road, which duty he performed for several weeks, to the relief of daily sufferers of the Blue Ridge and adjacent counties, upon whom are inflicted with impunity outrages, who watch every opportunity to shoot and capture our pickets and foraging parties. Their familiarity with the mountain defiles and passes enables them to elude pursuit.

STRASBURG, Va., Tuesday, May 20.

Last night guerrillas came down upon our pickets at the bridge near Cedarville, killed one and took two prisoners. They belonged to the First Rebel Michigan Cavalry, commanded by Major ALLEN.

THE MOUNTAIN DEPARTMENT.

A Guerrilla Band Dispersed and its Leader Killed.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

FRANKLIN, Va., Tuesday, May 20.

Lieut.-Col. DOWNEY, who went out to Warfordsville, near Moorfield, after the guerrillas who recently overpowered a party of convalescent soldiers in that neighborhood, reports having killed the leader, called Unknown, and three men, and that he wounded four. He took twelve prisoners. No loss on our side. The result is the dispersion of this band.

THE DISTURBANCES IN KANSAS.

Reply of Gen. Jennison to G. O. Bingham.

Col. JENNISON, who is now in Washington, has just issued the following document, which tells its own story:

G. C. BINGHAM, of Jefferson City, Mo., has published a letter, (which has been printed in pamphlet form, and distributed among the members of both Houses of Congress) assaulting me with opprobrious epithets of lesting. It would be unnecessary, either in justice to myself or my friends, to notice the slanders of a man, so well known to them as Mr. Bingham is, if it should be known, to whom his falsehoods or most his malice, but have, perhaps, an, comparatively, a stranger, my friends think it necessary that I should do so. I will, therefore, proceed to do so, in the following plain statement of facts.

It is well known that he was opposed to a convention being in Missouri—Slavery or anti-slavery, and for neutrality, all through. He consented to serve in the Convention, however, thinking they should not be sent out of the State, but for this out Friends Company. Col. Mulligan was at that time in command at Lexington, Mo. He ordered Capt. Bingham, with his company, to that city. The men obeyed, but he refused to go, and left the service. For this conduct I reported him to Maj.-Gen. Hunter, and praised his immediate arrest, upon the charge of desertion, and frame the charges and specifications of Mr. Bingham against me.

The first charge which Mr. Bingham makes against me reads as follows:

"Charge of his (Jennison's) band of lawless marauders being in the vicinity of Kansas City, early in the morning of the 8th of May, was observed stalking about the premises of Capt. (now Major) Fagnon, with drawn sabres, and evidently suspecting the purpose of their presence to be some other than pillage, apparently or actually intoxicated, and in a state of wild excitement."

The facts are these: The Governor of Kansas ordered me to repair with my command to the city of Kansas City, Capt. Fagnon afterwards directed me to Westport, Mo., to join a company under his command. I did so, and after the withdrawal of the rebels, I was ordered back to my camp near Lexington, Mo., by their chief, JENNISON. Leaving my camp, I was met with Maj. Van Horn and Col. Walker, who had been sent out from Lexington, Mo., to repel an expedition against a formidable rebel force, said to be at Harrisonville, in Cass County. Col. Walker, being of a higher rank, was in command of the Union forces, and I was ordered by him to take my command and report to him for duty. I was in the capacity of these irregular and loyal troops at his command.

Very true, I did return to Missouri, but it was under these circumstances: Col. NUGENT, of Missouri, commanding a regiment of Home Guards, sent a special messenger to me for help. He had been defeated by the rebels, Maj. VAN HORN, also of the Missouri Home Guards, while attempting to extricate him, was met by the enemy, in overwhelming force, and routed, losing his entire train, all his ammunition, and driven from Kansas. I met him and Col. NUGENT at the head of Wea Creek, Miami County, without food, or any means of obtaining or repelling the foe. A council of war was held. I was invited in, though at that time holding no office under the Government of the United States. It was ascertained that at Morrisville, Cass County, Mo., eight miles from the head of Wea Creek, the rebels were encamped, and had a large force, with artillery and ammunition. The decision of the council was, that I should take what available force we had and attempt the capture of the captured his supplies.

This council was held at night. The following morning I marched for Morrisville. The enemy knew of our approach. When nearing the town, I found him drawn up in line of battle, and far stronger than we were. We had no alternative. We must have provisions and powder, and therefore the men were eager for fight. I threw out fifty picked men as skirmishers, on my right, while I attacked the rebels on the left. This was about 10 A. M. The fight had been commenced on my right, when I ordered a charge with my entire force. The enemy retreated in confusion. I captured five wagons loaded with flour, two with provisions, fourteen kegs of powder, &c. This property I turned over to the officers of the Government, and then joined the Home Guards of Missouri, under Col. NUGENT and Major VAN HORN, relieved, and the Union men of that part of the State of Missouri, protected from rebel outrages.

The rebels, who had followed this battle at Morrisville, in the morning of our first was held, and it was determined to attack the rebels in force at Harrisonville, Cass County, Mo., some eighteen miles from the head of Wea Creek. Colo. WEAR and Messrs and Major VAN HORN desired me, again, to assume command and conduct the attack. I ordered our forces—seven hundred and fifty strong—to be ready to move at sunrise on the following morning.

We reached Harrisonville on the second day thereafter, at 9 A. M. When within two miles of that place, we met about five hundred rebels, drawn up in line of battle. As we approached, they fell back. We followed them into the city, I moved a portion of our force through the prairie and secretly dispatched the remainder through the timber, with orders to assail the enemy in his rear. A surprise was the result, and he fled in utter confusion, leaving everything behind, and, I may say, without a single shot. There, I was joined by Maj. VAN HORN and Col. WEAR, in their expedition against a formidable rebel force, said to be at Harrisonville, in Cass County. Col. WEAR, being of a higher rank, was in command of the Union forces, and I was ordered by him to take my command and report to him for duty. I was in the capacity of these irregular and loyal troops at his command.

At yesterday's Exchange the receipts being large, the trade was light, buyers having the advantage. The supplies of Wheat are interesting, but as a considerable portion thereof are unsound, there is less pressing on the market; prices, however, are materially lower and irregular. The market, yesterday, with heavy receipts, was weak, and lower for wheat, England and France operated freely at the decline. Indian Corn has declined in price, several cents. The receipts are moderate. NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

An arrival at Fortress Monroe from the Gulf brings advices from New-Orleans to the 8th inst., and from Pensacola to the 11th. The news from New-Orleans corroborates to a certain extent what has reached us through rebel channels. Gen. Butler landed on the 1st inst., and at first occupied the Custom-house as his headquarters, but subsequently removed to the St. Charles Hotel. Affairs were beginning to assume a more satisfactory appearance in the city. The Opelousas and Jackson Railroad had been taken possession of, and all the approaches to the city had been cut off. Gen. Phelps had occupied Carrollton, five miles up the river. Commander Farragut had reconnoitered the approaches to the harbor of Mobile, and had taken soundings preparatory to an attack. Pensacola was evacuated on the night of the 9th inst., as before stated. Gen. Arnold, in command at Fort Pickens, had succeeded in saving a portion of the public property. The city and forts had been occupied by our troops, and Gen. Arnold was expected to establish his headquarters on shore. The steamer Atlantic Island, which brings this intelligence to Fortress Monroe, has on board a number of prisoners taken in the naval battle below New-Orleans.

On Monday, Gen. McClellan's army again commenced a forward movement in the direction of the rebel Capital. The advance under Gen. Sherman reached the railroad bridge across the Chickahominy on Sunday, and found that structure very little damaged—only two spans of it having been burned, which could be replaced with very little difficulty. The pickets of the enemy were found to be guarding the whole line of the river in front of Richmond.

A dispatch from the army, yesterday, dated at Tunstall's Station, on the railroad between West Point and Richmond, announces that the advance under Gen. Sherman, after securing the bridge over the Chickahominy, had pushed on to Cold Harbor, on the road running to Richmond by way of New-Bridge, where he found the enemy in force. He drove in their pickets to within two miles of the main body, and encamped. This was on Monday night. The indications now are that the rebels intend to make a desperate fight for [illegible] the approaches to the city. [illegible] will probably be [illegible]

The Washington Intelligencer of Monday evening publishes the unofficial statement that the Galena [illegible] to City Point after their [illegible] on Thursday, and that the [illegible] to Jamestown Island. The Washington Star states the damage to the Naugatuck had been repaired, another 100-pounder having been mounted upon her. The transport Baltimore, which took Secretaries Seward and Welles up Pamunkey River, on her return Sunday morning, met the gunboats going toward Richmond. This is in accordance with the reports already published by us, that effective measures were being taken for the reduction of the rebel batteries at Fort Darling. From the accounts given this morning, it will be seen that the "repulse" of our gunboats from those batteries was just no repulse at all, but that they were simply forced to withdraw temporarily from lack of ammunition. The rebels have deserted the banks of the river below, the way is clear for our supply-vessels to go up.

The Washington Star of Monday evening says: "We have direct news from Gen. McClellan's headquarters up to a very late period, when he had moved them to Baltimore Cross Roads, a point on the Pamunkey River, near where the Richmond and York River Railroad crosses it, and within four miles of Bottom's Bridge—behind that river of which the rebels boasted they were to have made their grand stand for the defence of Richmond. He had reconnoitered, in person, quite up to the bridge, and had found that there were no rebels in arms on this side of it. The impression prevailed in his camps that the river's (Pamunkey) immediate south bank had also been abandoned for a line of defenses some miles nearer Richmond. If that proves true, it strikes us that it will be most advantageous for us, as being likely to give us, shortly, direct and uninterrupted communication between the bulk of our army there and the fleet operating before West Point. Our whole army are as confident as ever of the ultimate success of the campaign, which is being worked out day by day and step by step; each succeeding hour seeing some advantage gained that brings them securely nearer to Richmond."

A letter from our gunboat flotilla above Memphis says: "By the arrival of deserters from Hernando, we learn that Commodore Farragut's gunboats are still ascending the river, spreading consternation among the inhabitants wherever they appear. Vicksburgh and Natchez—the Rebels not forgetting of the South—are both believed to be in our possession, and several gunboats are reported to be advancing upon Memphis from below. In the latter city a vast amount of cotton, sugar and molasses has been burned and rolled into the river, and the work of destruction is still going on." Another letter from the flotilla has this statement: "You will perceive, by perusing the Memphis papers inclosed, that Corinth is in possession of Little Rock, and is now descending the Arkansas River, and will make a junction with our forces at Memphis."

Another band of guerrillas has been destroyed in Western Virginia and their leader killed. This good service was done by a force under Lieut.-Col. Downey, at Wardensville.

The citizens of Fork-of-Ten-Mile, a town near Clarksburgh, Virginia, recently held a meeting, without distinction of party, to protest against the organization of guerrilla bands. One of the resolutions adopted reads thus: "That we who voted for the Ordinance of Secession, doubly desire to express our disapproval of Southern guerrillas making this the theatre of their actions, and we pledge ourselves as law-abiding citizens, that we will neither aid, abet nor harbor them nor their unholy actions, unless coerced by superior power or force of arms, and that we will give information to the proper authorities, of persons visiting this country for said purpose, whenever known to us."

Gov. Johnson is enforcing his proclamation in Tennessee. A Union soldier had been fired on by a concealed foe in Murfreesboro, and for this twelve secessionists were arrested, including a brother of Mrs. Ex-President Polk. Two hundred loaded guns had been found at Murfreesboro.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, yesterday, petitions from merchants of New-York for a General Bankrupt law, were presented. Mr. Sumner gave notice that he would, to-day, call up the resolution for the expulsion of Senator Stark, of Oregon. The Pacific Railroad bill was briefly considered, but gave place to the Confiscation bill, upon which Mr. Davis, of Kentucky, spoke at length, in opposition to it. He had not concluded when the Senate adjourned.

In the House, a bill to establish certain post-routes was reported from the Post-office Committee and passed. It authorizes the building of a bridge across the Ohio at Steubenville. The Senate bill, providing that no person, by reason of color, shall be disqualified from carrying the mails, was reported back from the Post-office Committee, with a recommendation that it do not pass. A vote upon the report was not taken. The House proceeded to the consideration of the Confiscation bills, and debate upon them was continued until the adjournment.

GENERAL NEWS.

In his official report of the fight at Williamsburgh, Brig.-Gen. Burnsy says: "The Thirty-eighth New-York, or 'Scott Life Guard,' preserved well the high reputation for gallantry it gained at Bull Run, and although in that engagement and this it has lost fifteen officers and one-third of its numbers, it is still ready to devote the balance to support our flag. I ask that Congress will by special resolution authorize this regiment to place upon its flag 'Bull Run and Williamsburgh'; and the Fortieth New-York, or Mozart Regiment, 'Williamsburgh.'"

Letters from Port Royal announce the appearance of a dangerous disease among the horses there, which threatens to become contagious. Twenty had been shot, and a large number removed from camp to prevent the spread of the disease.

It is stated that Capt. Boggs got the Varuna into close quarters with the rebel boats by using pork under his boilers, thus causing a dense smoke like that given out by burning pitch pine, and temporarily making his antagonists believe that his craft was one of the Confederate fleet.

Report has sent Gen. Siegel to Washington, and subsequently up the Tennessee to reinforce Gen. Halleck. One of his friends writes that he was in Belleville, Ill., on May 15, where "he broke sundry bottles of wine." Apparently a rheumatic leg alone keeps him from active service.

The members of Morgan's marauding band, who were captured at Lebanon, Tenn., by Gen. Dumont, have arrived safely at Camp Chase, Ohio, despite the efforts of their leader to liberate them.

Col. Leonidas Metcalfe, an outspoken Union man, fought a duel near Dover, Ky., on May 8, with one W. T. Casto, a notorious secession lawyer of Maysville, Ky., who was recently liberated from Fort Lafayette. The weapons were Sharp's rifles, the distance twenty-five yards. Casto had the first fire. The Colonel returned by shooting his adversary through the heart. The difficulty originated in Col. Metcalfe having been instrumental in securing the imprisonment of Casto.

The remains of the late Major Ryerson, of the New-Jersey Eighth Regiment, who was killed in the battle of Williamsburgh, passed through New-ark en route for Pompton on Monday morning. All the military honors were paid the deceased. Among the pall-bearers were Brig.-Gen. T. Runyon, Col. James Rockwell, and Brigade Surgeon J. J. Craven.

In the medical statistics of the army from 1857 to 1854, transmitted to Hon. J. D. Bright, President of of the Senate, by Jefferson Davis, Secretary of War, July 23, 1856, on pages 609 and 621, will be found a statement showing the power of endurance of a South Carolina and a New-York regiment, respectively. South Carolina First Regiment, 1,024 men, campaign of 1847, eighteen and a-half months' service, loss by disease, 569; New-York Second, 1,063 men, seventeen and a-half months' service, loss by disease, 376. From this comparison of a Northern regiment with a Southern one, in a hot country campaign, it appears that the Southern regiment lost by disease very nearly twice as many as the New-York regiment in about the same length of time, and the loss from all other causes was one-third less to the Northern than to the Southern regiment.

The railroad bridge over the river at Nashville is progressing rapidly, the eastern span being nearly finished. The number of hands employed is forty. Mr. Benz, the contractor, intends to finish the bridge by the 1st of June.

A shoemaker in Philadelphia, named Peter Cherednon, on Monday last shot his wife with a revolver, and then used the same weapon to kill himself. Cause, jealousy.

The Fifty-sixth Anniversary of the Orphan Asylum Society of the City of New-York took place at the Asylum yesterday, in the presence of a very large audience. The exercises were most interesting. The receipts and expenditures of the Society last year were about $14,000.

At General Term of the Supreme Court, a motion was now made to strike the name of Alanson Nash from the roll of Attorneys, in pursuance of a proceeding instituted against him about two years ago, and which was stated in the Times of July 30, 1860. Mr. Nash is charged with unprofessional conduct in respect to certain moneys collected on behalf of a party claiming under an assignment from him. The evidence in the Craig libel suit, pending in the Superior Court, before Justice Mitchell, was now concluded, and the case will be summed up to-day. At General Term of the Supreme Court judgment was yesterday reversed in the Hackley contract controversy.

The Stock market opened with much firmness, yesterday, but fell back at the close of the day to about the prices of Monday afternoon. The National Stocks were firm, 104¼ for 1861 s 6 cents. Gold firm, at 105¾; Exchange, 113¾@114.

Receipts, sales and shipments of Breadstuffs, yesterday, were heavy, especially of Flour and Wheat. Prices, however, were again decidedly lower. Cotton and Whisky were in more demand, and were firmer. Provisions were rather sparingly purchased, as were also Groceries, Oils, Foreign Liquors, Naval Stores, Seeds, Iron, Spelter, Tin and Candles. Tobacco, Manila Hemp, Chemicals and Whalebone attracted more attention. A fair inquiry prevailed for Ingot Copper, Hay, Hides, Hops, Lead, Leather and Tallow. The freight market was unusually brisk, owing to the large shipments of Breadstuffs, and rates closed buoyantly.

The Live Stock Markets are active this week at advanced rates. Beeves numbered 3,350 at Forty-fourth-street, which is 1,300 less than last week. The stock is not as good, and Government agents have taken 400 head, leaving a light supply for butchers, who bought all the stock by Tuesday noon, at an advance of ½c. V lb. from last week, the best bringing 8c. Sheep are in active demand.

Slavery and the Rebellion—The President's Proclamation.

President Lincoln's Proclamation, which we published yesterday, is in every respect a remarkable document. It repudiates, in the most explicit and emphatic manner, Gen. Hunter's order emancipating the slaves in South Carolina, Georgia and Florida, and puts at rest forever all questions that may be raised hereafter concerning the powers and rights of Commanding Generals in the field to deal with the subject of Slavery on alleged grounds of military necessity. If it ever does become necessary so to deal with it, Mr. Lincoln says the duty and responsibility of so treating it belong to him. He is the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and in that capacity will take cognizance, in his own discretion and upon his own responsibility, of all such grave and important topics. The Declaration is just and timely. We hope it will have the effect of checking the mania, which seems to have become infectious among our Generals, of issuing political proclamations,—of settling the political future of the country according to their own ideas. We have had too much of this already. Mr. Lincoln's proclamation will, we presume, put an end to it.

The Proclamation is not limited to this object. The President does not leave it to be inferred that he underrates the magnitude of this great question, or that he is insensible to the proportions which it threatens to assume in the immediate future. In the following paragraph he makes an appeal which will rank hereafter among the most impressive and important ever addressed by the representative of a great nation to any portion of its people:

"On the 6th day of March last, by a special message, I recommended to Congress the adoption of a joint resolution, to be substantially as follows:

Resolved, That the United States ought to cooperate with any State which may adopt a gradual abolishment of Slavery, giving to such State, in its direction, compensation for the inconveniences, public and private, produced by such change of system.

The resolution, in the language above quoted, was adopted by large majorities in both branches of Congress, and now stands an authentic, definite and solemn proposal of the Nation to the States and people most immediately interested in the subject matter. To the people of these States I now earnestly appeal. I do not argue. I beseech you to make the arguments for yourselves. You cannot, if you would, be blind to the signs of the times. I beg of you a calm and enlarged consideration of them, ranging, if it may be, far above personal and partisan politics. This proposal makes common cause for a common object, casting no reproaches upon any. It acts not the Pharisee. The change it contemplates would come gently as the dews of heaven, not rending or wrecking anything. Will you not embrace it? So much good has not been done by one effort in all past times as in the Providence of God it is now your high privilege to do. May the vast future not have to lament that you have neglected it."

These are weighty, solemn, momentous words. The heart out of which they flow feels all the magnitude of the issues they involve, and is equal to the grandeur of the responsibilities they imply. It is, as Mr. Lincoln justly says, impossible for the people of the Southern States to be "blind to the signs of the times." Consciously or unconsciously they have been brought into a contest with the National Government which involves inevitably the fate of Slavery,—the very existence of their social and civil institutions. If they persist in this mad contest with a fixed and stable Government, having a recognized place among the civilized nations of the earth, representing twenty millions of people among the proudest, most intelligent and most high-spirited on the face of the earth, backed by enormous resources, and only stimulated by disaster to new efforts and new conquests, they simply rush upon their own destruction. There is no instance in history where any form of society, however sanctified by time or the affections of mankind, has survived a contest with the advancing spirit of a progressive age. The South call us of the North fanatics:—but in that very fanaticism, if they were wise, they would discern the utter hopelessness of the warfare they wage upon us. It was fanaticism in England which beheaded the King, and extinguished the throne, and rooted out of the English heart the sentiments and civil affections which had grown there longest and taken deepest hold on the public mind. It was the fanaticism of democracy which crushed all the institutions of the middle ages on the soil of France, and drenched its fields in the blood of all who opposed its resistless sweep. Suppose the people of the South once array against Slavery the full "fanaticism" of the United States, backed by the sympathy and the sentiment of the Christian world. Can they foresee for themselves any other result than utter and remediless ruin?

Up to the present time the contest of the Government with the rebellion which assailed its existence, has been conducted with the most scrupulous regard to the rights of the South under the Constitution they are seeking to destroy. This has not been done thoughtlessly or without a purpose. It has been in pursuance of a plan deliberately formed by the Government, and carried forward with a steady, single-minded disregard of all opposition from friends and foes, which may well challenge universal admiration. The President has from the beginning regarded this rebellion as a conspiracy, as the work of leading, active, selfish and wicked men, who have obtained temporary control of the resources, the prejudices, the passions of the Southern people, and are using them for the destruction of the Union. He believes that, if this assumption is correct, the Union can be restored whenever the military power which these leaders have marshaled on their side can be broken,—and whenever the great mass of the Southern people shall come to see the falsity of the pretexts by which they have been misled. He has based his policy, therefore, on strict constitutional right,—on magnanimity toward the great body of those who have been drawn into the rebellion. He has refused to countenance or tolerate any violation of their rights, any wanton trespass upon their property, any disturbance of their social and domestic peace, any aggravation of the evils which their own acts have brought upon them. Not a spy has yet been hung,—not a deserter has yet been shot,—not a traitor has yet been even tried by the National Government. The history of the world will be sought in vain for a parallel to this magnanimous forbearance.

Clearly enough this policy is experimental. It is so regarded by the Government. If the people of the South are open to arguments and influences of this kind, then this is the policy by which the Union may best be restored. It leaves behind it less of resentment, less of hatred, less of heart-burning, less of all the social passions which are least compatible with a peaceful and a prosperous Union. The Government does well to give it full and effective trial. If the experiment succeeds, Republican civilization will have achieved the noblest of all conceivable triumphs. The President has evinced the highest possible elevation of character, the largest and most statesmanlike sagacity, in carrying forward this experiment to its final and decisive test. The end is close at hand. Two more battles will end the first campaign. If the Federal troops gain Richmond and Corinth, the military power of the Confederacy will be broken. Its inability to maintain a de facto government against the United States will have been demonstrated, and it will then remain to be seen whether the great mass of the Southern people will accept this result as decisive, and respond to the invitation of the Federal Government to resume their position under the Constitution as members of the Union, or not.

Indications are not wanting that they will persist in the contest,—that they will give themselves up wholly to the dominion of passion, and a frenzied lust of power, and rush upon the ruin they have so madly invoked. If they do, they will find nothing standing between them and the "fanaticism" they affect to despise. They must prepare to meet the fullness of its fury, and to perish under its burning breath. The authority of the Government of the United States will be maintained over every foot of every Southern State, at whatever cost to those who may resist it, and if Slavery stands in the way, it will be extinguished, even if it be in the blood of those who make it their shield.

The people of the South have just the alternative offered to them by the proclamation of President Lincoln. If they choose to take upon themselves the task of initiating their deliverance from Slavery, they can have the aid of the General Government in protecting them from the evils and inconveniences which such an effort may cost. If they refuse, and persist in rebellion, they will find themselves utterly crushed under the power which they defy.

Latent Loyalty at the South.

Is there any Union sentiment at the South? is a question often asked among us, and more often abroad. And all eyes watch the progress of our armies, to see if any indications of the existence of such a sentiment are to be found. New-Orleans has been a point of special interest in this regard. The New-Orleans Crescent of April 28, three days after the arrival of Com. Farragut's vessels before the city, says:

"It is with feelings of the deepest pride that we point the Union officers to the fact that no Union sentiment exists in our midst; that with almost one voice and one tongue, this community entirely repudiates all allegiance to the old Government, and warmly and devotedly adheres to the new. And we respectfully, but firmly, assert that this sentiment, this feeling, is so firmly implanted in the breasts of our people, that no time, no circumstance, no change, can serve to eradicate it, or still their free souls in the struggle for their independence."

But this statement of a rebel newspaper is more than counterbalanced by the contrary statement, which we published on Sunday, of an escaped Union man. That statement is made by one who is personally known to us as an intelligent, educated and perfectly reliable gentleman, and we give the most implicit faith to its facts. Nor should we be surprised if there had not been, within the first three days, much, if any, outspoken Union sentiment. The Union men there, as elsewhere, know the desperate character of their enemies. The reign of terror under which they have lived, and which has forced them to be Secessionists from the lip outward, hiding their love for the Union in their hearts, cannot be at once shaken off. They must wait and see whether the devils which have been driven out may not return, for if they do, they are sure to be seven times more devilish than before. The expression of Union sentiments now would, in case of re-occupation of the city by the rebels, insure their utter ruin. They cannot be expected to throw their all upon the hazard, on the instant. But as time goes on, and as the powers of the rebellion wane, this fear will be less prevalent, the foul mists of falsehood in which they have been enveloped will clear away, and this hidden feeling will more and more come to the surface.

This is a matter of the utmost importance, and our leaders everywhere should be most careful never to leave unprotected any Unionists who have declared themselves such, on the faith of our assurances of protection. The fate of the Union men of Jacksonville must not befall others. It is too costly an experiment. We cannot afford to repeat it anywhere.

Another Brave.—Our Quaker brethren of Philadelphia are suffering from another of their periodical attacks of Mint-phobia. They are again in consternation over a proposition to create a Mint in New-York. They evidently suppose that Philadelphia would collapse instantly if we should get a Mint. On the whole, considering the wretchedness this business occasions our neighbors, we wish Congress would stop talking about it. The matter is of very little consequence to New-York, but to Philadelphia it is clearly a matter of life and death. Let us cart our gold thither a while longer; it hurts us but little and it helps them a great deal.

Southern Patriotism.—The Richmond Whig is becoming disgusted with the Confederate habit of "lying." In due time it may come to dislike their kindred practice of stealing. But the whole Confederacy rests on these twin supports. But for Floyd's original thefts they could have fought no battles, and then there would have been nothing to lie about. The Whig says, that when they see it asserted in a Southern newspaper that the whole National army has been annihilated, they at once know that the Confederate army is to be defeated the next day. The Whig learns slowly, but it is pleasant to perceive that it does learn after all.

Newspaperdom on Nos.—New subjects now engross more thought and solicitude at home and abroad than the question concerning the best system of National defence. Each passing month gives some new slip to public and professional opinion. One by one old fallies are rudely shaken, trampled down, revived, and again slain. The public mind will persist in regarding the public safety as everybody's affair. But the public mind is little furnished with the technical knowledge needed for any conclusive studies on subjects so thoroughly material as that of National defences. Hence we have seen Congress, which mainly expounds this opinion, pursuing a most fluctuating policy, in which, however, our friends across the water have not shuffled us.

Suddenly wooden walls are like those of Jericho, as the Merrimac sounds its ram's horn, and the duel between the pachyderms ends bloodless. The Admiralty rushes headlong into iron armor; the Ministry stops all work on fortifications. Forth steps Sir Wm. Armstrong, under War Office management, and with his big gun annihilates the Warrior target. Iron-clad sea knights thus again become mortal. What, for several years, Rodman's big gun had made apparent to our engineers, at last penetrated John Bull's knowledge-box. Then, again, iron-skinned rams thronged in Southern waters, like the terrific Saurians of that strangest of geologic ages. Behold, now, the obscuration of the constellation Aries, when Farragut and Davis dine on fricasseed rams! Once, a one-gun Martello tower beat off a frigate; now, behold the Potomac blockade, Port Royal, and Fort Jackson! Look from the sinking Cumberland to the Merrimac, now self-slain, without even a cross-road stake to mark its burial. Hurly-burly rules! What is true? What can we trust? Verily, Mr. Blair is right, and with him we say, let us have a Fortification Board, and let our best officers use their best sense, and give us light on this topic.

We are glad to see, in this connection, that Gen. Totten has developed his views on the subject, in an elaborate paper, an abstract of which we published yesterday. Gen. Totten regards stationary forts, with guns of large calibre, as superior to floating iron batteries, though there is no fort constructed, he says, which may not be reduced by land batteries—an opinion, however, only partially confirmed by the experience of the present war. But, indeed, the chief result of all our experiments on the respective capacities, offensive and defensive, of forts and ships, is to show how far the problem yet is from permanent practical solution. And hence the need that the grave question of our seaboard and lake defences should be well considered. While warmly greeting novelties which are reliable, let us be saved from quackeries. Let us have some safe, strong system of defence. Whether this shall consist of fortifications or not, is, we conceive, the main subject on which this proposed Board must use every effort to reach the truth. However firmly we may believe that methods now being developed among us will send to the bottom all hostile navies, we would have this great question of Fortifications or not maturely considered by such a Board as the Military Committee of the House proposes.

Reorganization Required in Florida.—We have repeatedly urged upon Government the necessity of establishing a loyal and legitimate Government for the State of Florida. It is now more imperative than ever; and its authority might now at once be extended over the whole surface of the State. Since the evacuation of Pensacola there is not a rebel force in Florida except here and there a few hundred local rebel militia, or some scattered bands of marauders. A short term of martial law would soon put an end to these, and would restore the State to order, and to the operations of trade and commerce. There is a large amount of cotton on the plantations—the pick of last year—that might be brought out. It has not been burned there, and there is no likelihood or possibility of its being burnt.

The rule of the Military Governor lately appointed for the "Department of the South," extends, we believe, over Florida; but it will be utterly impossible for a man who has his headquarters at Port Royal to look after the civil and local interests of a State situated as Florida is. It requires the immediate oversight of an officer who exercises his functions from the State Capital, and who can attend to the details of an administration in itself sufficiently onerous.

It needs no additional military force to that which is now in Florida to carry out this programme. There are already troops and naval vessels at St. Augustine, and at other points on the eastern side of the peninsula; there is a respectable force at Key West, and in the forts on the Southern Keys; there is a small body at Cedar Keys, on the western side of the peninsula; and there is a military and naval force at Pensacola. These military and naval detachments are abundantly sufficient to hold and possess the State. The troops on the Southern Keys are not now needed; they are neither menaced from land nor sea. Why could they not be moved up to Tallahassee, and the machinery of a legitimate Government be at once set in motion? Not to mention other considerations, it would be proof positive to the world of the dominancy of the National Government in another of the sovereign States claimed by his late Excellency, Jeff. Davis.

Our Gunboats in James River.—The repulse of our gunboats in the James River proves to have been a matter of little importance. It was due to the fact that they undertook a job for which they were never intended. They could not possibly give their guns sufficient elevation to reach the forts aimed at. A few mortars will do the business.

Compensation for Slaves.—A correspondent submits, in another column, a highly ingenious and satisfactory view of the practical working of the President's emancipation policy. He reasons that in the substitution of free for slave labor the State is indirectly a gainer, and it is only reasonable of the temporary loss sustained to be stifled by individuals in bearing their share that compensation by the National Government thereunto pertains. The beneficial as well as compensatory character of the President's plan could not be more effectively stated.

The Course of Events.—It looks as if Jeff. Davis was going to abandon Richmond. The rebel Legislature of Virginia, seeing the army retire from one after another of the defences of the Capital, began to get terrified lest both the Capital and the State were about to be forsaken by the protecting angels of the rebel army; and demanded of Jeff. Davis his intentions in the matter. He replied that he had never entertained a thought of withdrawing from Virginia; but, said he, "if in the course of events, the capital should fall," etc., etc., "the war could still be successfully waged on Virginia soil for twenty years." This is a remarkable change from the assured and defiant notes heretofore given forth from Richmond. Jeff. Davis admits the possibility of its evacuation—he was so may, since the National army has reached within ten or fifteen miles of the city, and the Monitor is within eight miles of it. But the fall of Richmond does not imply the abandonment of Virginia. It would not do, of course, to admit such a thing at present, when Virginia troops are one of the main stays of the rebel army. Whether it does or not, however, depends greatly upon the "course of events," of which the rebel chief appears not to have much control at present. It is a preposterous falsehood, worthy only of Jeff. Davis, that his army could maintain a contest twenty years after the fall of Richmond, or even twenty weeks. The different columns of our army, those of McDowell, Banks, Fremont, Wool and Burnside, are now so placed that the fall of Richmond would be the signal for a simultaneous advance upon every railroad, city, and position of value in the State. He cannot, of course, flee northward; he cannot flee to the mountains, for it would be impossible to subsist his army there; he cannot attempt to hold Petersburgh or Lynchburgh, while Suffolk is in our hands, and Weldon soon will be. If he thinks to escape from Richmond with his army, and carry on a war for twenty years between Petersburgh and the North Carolina line, he must be as great a fool as he has proved himself a traitor. But this whole talk is evidently intended as a counteractive to the depressing effect upon the rebels of the projected evacuation of Richmond.

Printing Unofficial Speeches.—Since the Daily News subsided and vanished, its manager has been at a loss to express his concession dogmas with any degree of comfort and safety. Ingenuity at length suggested the veil of romance. Mr. Ben. Wood became a novelist, and gave to the Press a one-volume story, entitled Love and Secession, which we presume has been read more or less by public body. Taking courage at the security of this flight in the realms of fancy, Mr. Wood determined upon a fresh and more daring assault upon the loyal sentiment of the country. A few days ago he sought of the House of Representatives' leave to print a speech, which the House did not care to have read. Leave was granted; and this speech, which might not unfairly be termed a labor of "love and legislation," appears at great length in the official Globe. And thus, with Congressional sanction, has the honorable member spread before the world opinions which he dared not publish in the News for fear of punishment, and the effectual tendency of which is to lend as much aid and comfort to the enemy as the slaughter of two Union regiments.

The practice of authorizing the publication, in official form, of speeches the House declines to hear, is a highly pernicious one. The orator may avail himself of his immunity from the rules of order to be as virulent and personal in his attacks, and as traitorous in his revelations as he chooses, and his parliamentary privilege shields him from all proper accountability. Mr. Wood is not proverbially a modest man; but even he had not the audacity to stand up and pour out upon the House his volume of secessionist sympathy; and if this license had not been afforded him, no such disloyal matter would have been recorded officially for permanent preservation among the Congressional debates. Hereafter it will not only be safer, but more just, for the House to inflict upon the public no oratory which it declines to entertain itself.

Secession from Secession.—Arkansas furnishes an additional illustration of the inevitable tendency of secession to work out its own destruction. Though not in form, yet in spirit this development is of precisely the same character as the remarkable movement in North Carolina, noticed yesterday. Gov. Rector, of Arkansas, has issued an address to the people of that State, in which, amid a great deal of coarse rhetoric, of the true Arkansas stamp, about subjugation by the "Hessians of the North," domination by the "detestable and execrable Lincoln Government," &c., the following significant passage occurs:

"It was for liberty she struck, and not for domination to any created secondary power. Such, no doubt, her best friends are her natural allies, outside of hence, who will palsied when she bleeds, where our most hope is not beyond her existence. If the aristocrats of the Confederate heart do not permeate beyond the east bank of the Mississippi, let Southern Missouri, Arkansas, Texas, and the great West know it, and prepare for the future. Arkansas, had, perhaps, unanticipated, is not Arkansas as she entered the Confederate Government. Nor will she remain Arkansas as a Confederate State, deserted as a wilderness by her children, flying from the wrath to come, and build them a new ark and launch it on new waters, carrying a choice remnant of equality, safety and rest."

The Mercantile Library Association.

The annual election for officers of the Mercantile Library Association took place at Clinton Hall, Astor-place, yesterday, and resulted in the election of the following ticket for the year 1862 and 1863, by an average of sixty majority:

For Vice-President—Harvey E. Woods.
For Corresponding Secretary—Theodore V. Tyler.
For Recording Secretary—James E. Purdell.
For Treasurer—Alexander Baird.
For Director—Royal Phelps, William Astor, A. A. Allen, Anson A. Brown, Theodore L. Hazard, J. Valentine, Wm. H. Maynard, Theodore H. Tuttle.

FROM WASHINGTON.

The President's Proclamation of Gen. Hunter.

Views and Policy of the Military Governor of North Carolina.

Telegraphic Communication with Fort Monroe Again.

SPECIAL WASHINGTON DISPATCHES.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, May 20.

THE PRESIDENT'S PROCLAMATION.

The Proclamation of the President continues the topic in all circles here to-day. The general tone of the comments on both sides, all tends to the praise of the wisdom and foresight of the Executive Magistrate. Gen. Hunter will not be disturbed, the President considering that, with his unauthorized proclamation of Martial Law, and a complete revocation thereof, the public interest has been sufficiently discussed and regarded. Those who best know Gen. Hunter do not expect his resignation, though it is urged that the sudden thwarting of his pet scheme of carrying on the war will induce him to tender his resignation. Another statement made, on apparently good authority, is that the President has asked Gen. Hunter, with a view to a personal interview.

NEW MILITARY GOVERNOR OF NORTH CAROLINA.

Hon. Edward Stanly is on the eve of departure for North Carolina. He to-day received his commission as Military Governor of that State. He is invested with the powers, duties and functions of that station, including the power to establish all necessary courts and tribunals, and suspend the writ of habeas corpus during the pleasure of the President or until the loyal inhabitants shall organize a State Government in accordance with the Constitution of the United States. His powers are exactly similar to those with which Gov. Johnson, of Tennessee, is invested.

LAKE DEFENCE AND LAKE COMMERCE.

The subject of lake defences and lake commerce was earnestly and fully presented, this morning, by a delegation from New-York detained in Congress, by the Hon. Reuben E. Fenton, who appeared in behalf of the State. The principal topics discussed were the present undefended condition of the lakes, and the great extent and rapid growth of the commerce on their waters. Also, the vast importance of the cereal products of the States surrounding the Lakes in furnishing the staples of foreign commerce, and, consequently, in turning the balance of trade on imports to be received in exchange. Striking comparisons were made between the agricultural products of elsewhere in Europe, and the exports of other agricultural products, especially those on the Baltic and Black Seas, with an interesting exhibit of the steadily increasing demand in the markets of Great Britain. The two cardinal measures growing out of these discussions, and which must occupy the attention of Congress, will be the opening of adequate channels from the eastern and western extremities of the lakes. The first to be effected by enlarging the locks on the Erie and Oswego Canals, and the other by the enlargement of the Illinois from Chicago to the Illinois River. It is hoped that these two great measures may be adopted as integral portions of our harmonious system extending from the Hudson to the Mississippi, including the passage throughout the line of mail-steamers, and contributed to the defence of those great inland but truly National waters. Mr. Rogers, one of the Representatives from the Lake Ports, will address them at a meeting to be held for the purpose of the Central to-morrow morning.

A BANKRUPT LAW.

A delegation of New-York merchants is here urging Congress to pass a Bankrupt law. Since the summary dismissal of Mr. Comstock's bill in the House, without action upon it, was postponed to December next, the friends of the measure have been somewhat discouraged. They may hope, however, to secure the attention of Congress, and the deliberations referred to will place in the hands of members of the House a draft of a bill, which they deem even more complete than that of Mr. Comstock, which was prepared with much care, and after consultation with the legislation of the principal European States upon the subject. Letters from various parts of the country intimate a desire for the early passage of an efficient law.

THE CASE OF MAJOR WILLIAMS.

The commencement of the arrest and confinement of Major Lawrence Williams, of the Sixth Regular Cavalry, on a charge of holding treasonable intercourse with the rebels assisting Gen. McClellan's army, is a matter little surprise in Washington. Major Williams is known here as an officer whose loyalty has frequently been questioned. His brother, who was killed in Gen. Bonny, is known to have lived at Arlington House, and daily informed Gen. Lee of all movements at the War Department. When Gen. Lee joined the rebel army, this fellow went with him, and he is believed still to be in the Confederate service, and to have married a daughter of Lee. Lawrence Williams was on duty, with rank of Lieutenant, in Utah, Major Buchanan being in Utah, and holding a Captain's commission under the chief of McClellan's army. Gen. Cooper was appointed, he by reason of his relation to the family of Major, to the great fortune of the Confederacy. The complaints drawn and foppish manners of this disciple of sensible soldiers at Williamsburg, during the entire Winter, and his boastful conquests among the ladies prevented the laughter of the town, which he received in the best circles. He has always expressed until the present campaign of McClellan's he would retire service or perform only staff duty.

CONTEMPLATED TELEGRAPH CABLE LAID.

The telegraph cable was successfully laid yesterday, across Chesapeake Bay, from Cherrystone to Black River, in Virginia, and the War Department is in communication with Fortress Monroe and Gen. McClellan's headquarters. The cable, twenty-five miles in length, is heavily constructed with sixteen steel wires, arranged spirally, like the staves of a barrel, with a waterproof coat and wrapper, and protected from all attack by any force short of a regular attack. It is supposed to bear the covering wires, the tensile strength of which equals that of a chain cable. The length of steel wires are hooped by a still heavier wire, wound spirally around them, which binds them together, so that they form a strong and elastic tube of iron that effectually protects the conductor and the insulating coat. This is considered a great improvement over the Hagerman cable, in which the spiral wire armor which was intended to protect the Atlantic cable, and tended so powerfully to twist and kink. At the time of laying the first temporary cable, there was no heavy cable in this country, or machinery for its construction. The experiment was made with such cable as could be extemporized on the moment, and which was constructed from the English cable, 270 miles in length, laid in the Black Sea, between Varna and Balaklava during the Crimean war, and which worked to admiration for several months. The temporary cable worked admirably, and most opportunely to relieve the public mind on the memorable Sunday of the battle between the Monitor and the Merrimac, but in a few hours was dragged away by anchors, or otherwise injured, an accident not likely to happen to a cable of such immense strength as the new one. The present cable, which has now been laid, is the result of the experience of the past year, and is the strongest cable ever made. It is supposed that it will be in working order in a few days, when the Government will be in communication with Fort Monroe and the Peninsula.

THE COMPLAINTS FOR ARMS.

The bids for arms have not yet been arranged by the Ordnance Department, and the awards cannot be made for several days. The bids are numerous, and with the united clerical force at command, it is not possible that the anxiety of bidders can be immediately relieved.

DISCHARGES FROM THE ARMY.

The increased sickness in the army rendering necessary the granting of a large number of discharges daily, will probably oblige the issuing of an order to Governors of States permitting more recruiting. It is understood that in several States there are a number of incomplete regiments, which, if filled up and brought into the field, would form an effective force. These will probably be ordered without delay to relieve the forces now protecting this city and Maryland. The regiments discharged by the cessation of war, will also be permitted to recruit up to their original standard.

THE RELEASED PRISONERS.

The recent arrival of National prisoners released from Richmond, on parole, and quartered here at the "Soldiers' Rest," are still in total darkness as to what our Government intends to do with them—whether to pay them off and send them home, or keep them till exchanged and take them into service again; or when anything will be done. Such suspense is little better than their former imprisonment.

SICK AND WOUNDED.

Information was received here to-night, that the Daniel Webster left Yorktown to-night, under direction of the Sanitary Commission, for Boston, with 200 sick soldiers, fully equipped with surgeons, nurses and hospital supplies.

NAVAL ORDERS.

Capt. James L. Lardner, of the Susquehanna, has been ordered to the Sun Juliette, and to proceed to the Gulf to relieve Flag-Officer McKean of the Eastern squadron. The Niagara will come North for repairs.

Capt. Rogers Rennie has been ordered to take charge of the receiving ship at the Norfolk Navy-yard.

Edward Moran, of Portsmouth, N. H., has been appointed Acting-Master, and ordered to Baltimore to command the United States bark Pawnee.

James B. Hennessy, of Baltimore, has been appointed Acting Master and ordered to the same vessel.

J. R. Lee, of Commodore Dupont's squadron, has been promoted to Acting Master on board the steamer Wyandotte.

Commander R. B. Hitchcock has been ordered to report to Flag-Officer Goldsborough for the command of the Susquehanna.

Lieut. W. R. Hoening has been ordered to the Philadelphia rendezvous.

Lieut. T. H. Hasbrat has been ordered to the United States steamer Keystone State, to relieve Lieut. Gansel.

Lieut. Benjamin Tayloe has been ordered to the United States steamer Cimarron, at Bordentown, N. J.

FROM SAVANNAH.

An army officer, just arrived here from Port Royal, denies the published statement that at the last accounts our pickets were within four miles of Savannah.

NEGROES AND THE MAILS.

Senator Sumner's bill removing the disability of negroes for carrying the mails, which passed the Senate by a large majority, appeared in the House this morning. The Post-Office Committee reporting adversely upon it, after a lively discussion action upon it was deferred for the present.

NO EXECUTIVE SESSION.

No Executive session of the Senate was held to-day. The Senate Committee have been unable to agree upon the confirmation of Isaac Newton as Chief of the new Agricultural Bureau, and his confirmation by the Senate is considered very doubtful. He is said to be entirely devoid of the qualifications necessary for so important a position. This appointment created some surprise.

OUR WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE.

HOW THE RUMOR OF THE REPULSE OF OUR GUNBOATS BELOW RICHMOND AFFECTS THE PUBLIC—GEN. HUNTER AND HIS EMANCIPATION ORDER—THE HERALD AND SENATOR LANE, OF KANSAS—THE STATE TREASURER OF MISSOURI AND COL. JENNISON, ETC.

WASHINGTON, Sunday Evening, May 18, 1862.

The tone for the day was given us this morning by the dispatch announcing the repulse of our gunboats from Fort Darling. The terms of the dispatch are probably needlessly alarming, as the document itself is unsatisfactory in details. It has impressed the public with a feeling of apprehension; they cannot understand how it happened that our iron-clads—the Monitor included—are repulsed by a fortification of which nobody ever before heard. If it had mid—what will probably prove to be the fact—that our fleet was stopped by obstructions in the river, and that the killed and wounded were victims to the unfortunate explosion of the gun on the Naugatuck, we could have gone to our devotions with quite undepressed.

The conscription order of Gen. Hunter provoked a good deal of comment. The general expression is against it, in one shape or another—the Pro-Slavery Unionists denouncing it with considerable severity; the Anti-Slavery men regretting that it should have undertaken to do more than it can accomplish. The action of the President is claimed to be known in advance by both parties; the one insisting that he will at once remove Gen. Hunter from his command, and the other denying that he will in any way interfere. A Cabinet Minister said, to-day, in positive terms, that he would be recalled. There are grave reasons why an extreme course should not be adopted; while on the other hand, it is impossible that the President should fail to rectify the error. That Gen. Hunter has exceeded his powers, no one can reasonably deny; the readers of the Times have had an admirable exposition of the case in the editorial of Friday. Had he confined the effect of his order to that part of South Carolina within his lines, I think the voice of the whole people would have sustained him; for the most Pro-Slavery of loyal men are willing that South Carolina should be dealt with in the most summary and exemplary manner. In limiting the scope of his action to the territory contained within his lines, he would have attempted no more than he could execute; and, what is a consideration of vast practical importance, he would have command to free no slaves but such as he was able to protect and employ.

To make a change in the head of the Department, will operate injuriously. Gen. Hunter has now become thoroughly acquainted with his field; he has informed himself with all the conditions by which he is surrounded; he has made simple and short-sighted arrangements for the health and safety of his troops during the hot season, which is fast coming upon them. He has the confidence and affection of his command, although it is mainly composed of men of Pro-Slavery antecedents. A successor may not with these advantages, with the military experience and skill which Gen. Hunter is conceded to possess. Hence, I trust that the President may feel it his duty, in this case, to follow the course he adopted under similar circumstances in Missouri, and leave Gen. Hunter in command of the Department of the South, while he effects such a modification of his general order as will make it legal, practical, and in consonance with the sentiment of the country.

Capt. Ely, chief of Gen. Hunter's Staff, is just in from Port Royal, and reports that the army is expecting an advance on Charleston. He brings no news of general interest.

A dispatch in Friday's Herald does great wrong to Senator Lane of Kansas. In the stang phrases appropriate to that journal, it alluded to his proposed expulsion of last winter, and effects to represent him the judgment of the party to which he belongs. Since his return from Kansas, Gen. Lane has confined himself strictly to the duties of his office; he has sought no notice from the public, and has avoided his political views upon the country. Yet no member of the Kansas line has been more indefatigable in business; and none has probably accomplished more for his State or the country at large. Why a newspaper should thus seek to misrepresent a gentleman to whom fair minded men can ascribe no creditable answer.

We have a pamphlet war between the State Treasurer of Missouri, B. G. Brannan, and Col. Jennison, the Jayhawker. Mr. Brannan's pamphlet, which abounds in severe charges, was sent here to each member of Congress, and Col. Jennison has given it a pamphlet answer, and circulated it in the same way. So far as I can judge from looking over both documents, and from some previous knowledge of the facts, Col. Jennison has the best of the dispute. It is significant, too, that the Kansas men here are all on his side. Jennison is a man of quick impulses, as well as prompt and active; and it would be strange if he had not made some mistakes. But it is a fact that he crushed out the rebel lion in Western Missouri at a time when not to have crushed it would have been a serious evil to the National cause, and would have subjected Kansas to ruinous raids from the struggling guerillas of Hayes and others. If Mr. Brannan shall show all the charges made against him, none have been proved of a criminal character. He may have been guilty of indiscretions, and even have sworn the negroes of rebels and those claimed for Conditional Unionists. If so, it is a disease that every day of the rebellion aggravates among loyal men.

By the way Congress works I anticipate an early adjournment. J. M. W.

THE PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, May 20.

Messrs. Harris, of New-York, (Rep.,) and King, of New-York, (Rep.,) presented petitions from merchants of New-York for a general Bankrupt act.

Mr. Wade, of Ohio, (Rep.,) presented petitions for an efficient Confiscation act.

Mr. Sumner, of Massachusetts, (Rep.,) gave notice that he should to-morrow call up the resolution for the expulsion of the Senator from Oregon, (Shark.)

Mr. McDougall, of California, (Dem.,) moved to take up the Pacific Railroad bill.

The bill was taken up by Yeas, 23; Nays, 16, but before the reading was finished the morning hour expired, and the Confiscation bill was taken up.

Mr. Davis, of Kentucky, (Union,) proceeded to speak at length upon it. He said the hope of a restoration of the Union had greatly decreased from any measures proposed by Congress, though he had some hopes of the brave men who had left their homes to fight the nation's battle.

Mr. Davis proceeded to review the course toward this country. He referred to the ill success of raising cotton in other countries, and to the intense hate of the Cotton States toward the Government, but which might be overcome by proper measures, and the preservation of the Constitution in all its integrity. He should oppose every attempt to impair the Constitution from any quarter or under any pretext. He replied at some length to the Senator from Massachusetts, (Wilson,) after having spoken three hours and over.

Mr. Howard, of Michigan, (Rep.,) moved to adjourn.

Disagreed to—Yeas 17, Nays 18.

Mr. Powell, of Kentucky, (Union,) moved to postpone the bill to-morrow, to allow his colleague to finish his speech. He thought it very unusual to refuse such a request.

Mr. Fessenden, of Maine, (Rep.,) said it was very unusual at this period of the session, on a bill which had been under discussion for a month, the Senator to make a speech on the general principles hours in length, and ask for more time.

Mr. Grimes, of Iowa, (Rep.,) said if the sole purpose of the haste on this bill was to get at the Tax bill, he was in no hurry, for he thought other things more important than to hurry to tax our people. Before we proceed to tax our people heavily, he wanted some policy of Government settled; so that the people may know it. He as the representative of a sovereign State, wanted to know what the policy of the Government was going to be.

After further discussion by Messrs. Trumbull, Clark, Fessenden and Wade,

Mr. Chandler, of Michigan, (Rep.,) moved to amend Mr. Powell's motion so as to postpone the bill for one week. He said he was opposed to the bill, and wanted to postpone till he could get the bill from the House.

After a discussion, Mr. Chandler withdrew his motion, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, May 20.

Mr. Blake, of Ohio, (Rep.,) reported, from the Post-office Committee, a bill to establish certain post-routes. It declares the bridge partly constructed across the Ohio River, at Steubenville, Ohio, abutting on the Virginia shore, to be a lawful structure, a public highway, and establishes a post-route for the purpose of transmitting the mails; and that the Steubenville and Indiana Railroad Company, and the Holiday Cove Railroad Company, or either of them, are authorized to have, maintain and operate said bridge when completed. Draws are to be provided for the passage of boats.

Mr. Blake said the bridge would not materially interfere with the navigation of the Ohio River.

The bill was then passed.

Mr. Ostin, of New-York, (Opp.,) presented four petitions from the principal importers of New-York for the extension of time to three years within which goods can remain in bond.

Mr. Dunn, of Massachusetts, (Rep.,) asked, but failed to receive consent, to introduce a resolution providing for a Delegate to Congress to represent the District of Columbia.

Mr. Colfax, of Indiana, (Rep.,) from the Post-office Committee, reported back the Senate bill providing that no person, by reason of color, shall be disqualified from carrying the mails, with the recommendation that it do not pass.

Mr. Colfax said that not a single person, of any color, from any State, had ever petitioned for this repeal. No Postmaster-General had ever recommended it—no public opinion demanded it. It would not only allow negroes to be mail contractors, and therefore officers of the Government, but Indians and Chinese also. It would impair the security of the mails, for in some States blacks, Indians and Chinese are not allowed to testify against whites, and, if robbed while in their hands, we could not procure legal testimony, as now, of the mail carriers against the robbers. It would also allow slaveholding contractors to use their slaves as mail carriers for them, instead of free white, whom they are now compelled to employ, and money would thus be paid out of our Post-office Treasury for the labor of slaves, which is now impossible, and, as this bill could not, even indirectly, aid in crushing out this rebellion, which he thought the main duty of Congress, or stripping the power which sustains this treason, a large majority of the Post-office Committee concurred with him in recommending that it do not pass.

Mr. Dawes, of Massachusetts, (Rep.,) referring to an objection stated by Mr. Colfax, inquired, by way of answer, whether the latest supposed mail carriers there were tried in State or United States Courts, and whether he and himself did not assist in making the laws.

Mr. Colfax replied that, not being a lawyer, he could not fully understand the matter; but he understood that in such cases, the National Court was invoked.

Mr. Wickliffe, of Kentucky, (Union,) approved of the decision of the Committee. He had been informed that this bill was introduced into the Senate to remove the disability of a distinguished gentleman of this State, who had been, if I express even to be quite well acquainted, was a loyal slave and the whole proposition seemed to be nothing but a mere piece of jugglery. We should throw upon the floor here, and admit them as members of Congress. (Laughter.)

Mr. Covode explained the reasons for the Committee's action.

Before disposing of the question, the House proceeded to the consideration of the Confiscation bills.

Mr. Riddle maintained the justice of these measures, and answered the Constitutional objections to them.

Mr. Conkling moved to lay the bill upon the table, but the hour fixed for the consideration of the Confiscation bill having arrived, the vote came over until to-morrow.

Mr. Rice, of Massachusetts, (Rep.,) Chairman of the Select Committee, who reported the Confiscation bills, said that the war originated in the rebel States and is carried on by the rebel citizens against this Government. Then, Congress, with its constitutional power of declaring the rebel States, if such they consider the property, and the property of the citizens, and Congress may make the property of rebels subject to paying the expenses incurred by carrying on the war, and their slaves may be made to fall that instrument by which they are made to fall that instrument by which they are made to fall that instrument by which they are

THE RUMORS OF INTERVENTION.

M. MERCIER'S VISIT TO RICHMOND.

Various rumors continued to float about relative to the political significance of M. Mercier's visit to Richmond, but they are all apparently disposed of by an announcement made in the House of Commons by Mr. LAYARD on the 9th inst., to the effect that M. Mercier went to Richmond without any instructions from his own Government, and that his visit was attended with no political result whatever.

The Paris correspondent of the Index (the new London organ of the Confederates) writes as follows, under date of May 7:

"I said that the denouement of the tragedy cannot be much longer delayed. M. Mercier leaves New-York the 15th inst., to report to the Emperor the result of the negotiations which he has been instructed to open with the Southern States.

"Immediately on his return, that is to say, before the end of the present month, the Imperial decision will be published to the world, and I repeat what I said by my last letter, that the decision will be enforced, if necessary, with the whole power of the armies and navies of France.

"The objects of M. Mercier's visit are briefly these: First, to ascertain the condition of things in the Confederate territory, and the resources of its Government to prolonged resistance. Secondly, to ascertain whether, and on what terms, the Confederacy is disposed to accept the mediation of France, and consider with her in regards boundary and other questions, and the disposition of debatable territory, the Confederate Government does not consider sufficient guarantee of an honorable peace; and, on the other hand, what concessions it is willing to make. Thirdly, and as an important upon the others, what terms can be offered to France and to her industrial interests, in exchange of her mediation being accepted and successful.

"These, you may rely upon it, are the outlines of M. Mercier's instructions."

Mr. LAYARD's announcement seems to dispose of this "reliable" information.

An official dispatch from Lord LYONS to Earl RUSSELL says: "Although the power to make arbitrary political arrests has not been formally renounced by the Executive Government, it has not, so far as I know, been recently exercised. I am not aware of any British subject being now arbitrarily detained as a political prisoner."

The Independance Belge says that "the object of M. Slidell's recent visit to London was to induce England to consent to a common intervention in America, and England has agreed, but only on one condition, viz: the previous settlement of the Roman question. The Imperial Government lent an ear to this proposition, and it has thus led the English Cabinet to confer with it as to an intervention in American affairs."

GREAT BRITAIN.

In the House of Commons, on the 8th inst., the question of which Mr. SLANEY had given notice, relative to mediation by England in the American difficulty, was not brought forward. The motion in regard to the distress in Lancashire was also postponed, on motion of Col. WILSON PATTEN, the mover, having met with an accident.

On the motion for the second reading of the Customs and Inland Revenue bill, Sir SAMUEL MORSE embodied an elaborate survey of England's financial position, which he considered most satisfactory. He argued that the state of England's foreign relations did not warrant the present high expenditure, and he strongly urged prudence and economy.

Mr. GLADSTONE vindicated his views as to the public expenditure, and his financial policy generally, at great length.

Mr. DISRAELI criticised not only Mr. GLADSTONE's management of the Exchequer, but also the foreign policy of the Government. He considered that the period was an opportune period for considering a reduction in the warlike expenditure of the country. He argued that the foreign policy of England, which had interests were concerned, would be in close union and harmony with the interests of France and Austria; but instead of this being the case, the representatives of England and France everywhere, and especially in America, were acting against each other with suspicion, and even hostility. He contended that in Italy England's policy ought to have the same object in view as that of France, and that it was only by mistake that it was not so. He said this question would soon come to a crisis, and he hoped that modern practices of the application of reserves and the non-intervention of nations, but there was nothing in the condition of Southern Italy or Rome, which might to have led to the divergence of policy, and the irritation which was unknown to prevail between the French and English Governments. The military resources of France was unlimited. France required repose and retrenchment, and it was in the power of the Government by adopting a cordial policy and reconciling the only two powers which could give the concerts of Europe—by so doing they would get rid of the swollen and bloated armaments which had brought the country to this extent of financial embarrassment, which however necessary at first, could not be got rid of if the noble lord at the head of the Government acted up to the principles which he professed. Having reviewed at some length, he questioned the views of Mr. Cobden with respect to England's colonial empire, and maritime law.

Lord PALMERSTON responded, and said the honorable gentleman charged the Government with acting in an unfriendly manner toward France, but he must have had some secret information, or the Government were labouring under a great delusion with respect to their relations with France. He (Palmerston) clearly denied the imputations of the right honorable gentleman. The policy of the two Governments with respect to America had been in the most perfect accord. In the Times article, the conduct of the French Minister had been most honorable, and the existence of two diplomatists had never been more frank and candid than those of M. Mercier and Lord LYONS. With respect to Italy, the two Governments naturally regarded the question from different points of view. England had no interests of her own, but France, as a Catholic and Continental Power, had interests with which England had no concern.

After some remarks on the Italian question and the subject of neutrality, Lord PALMERSTON said it was the duty and the policy of the Government to maintain the honor of the country at the point adequately to secure her honor and her safety, so that the world should see that the power of any foreign Power, whatever relation to their foreign policy, they thought it, and, although he was happy to say that we did not at present apprehend any such danger, yet if we were suddenly menaced with the [illegible]

[illegible] Parliament, he proposed that the House should resume in the morning, and giving expression to his "Amen.")

After some remarks by many other speakers, the bill was read a second time.

Mr. W. FORSTER made an inquiry as to the new Slave-trade treaty with the United States.

Mr. LAYARD said he was happy to state that a treaty for the suppression of the Slave-trade had been concluded between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of the United States. That treaty was of a highly satisfactory nature; were the crews of vessels in British cruisers, and there was every reason to hope that the Slave-trade, which had been carried on to so great an extent by vessels under the United States flag, would be suppressed. He was in the meantime there were no changes the treaty would be laid on the table.

In the House of Commons, on the 9th inst., Mr. Alexander Ramsay drew attention to the prevailing distress in Lancashire, owing to the cotton crisis. He wished to have the opinion of the President of the Poor Law Board on the subject, and also asked the Secretary of State for India, whether reductions in the India tariff had been decided upon, and when they would come into operation.

Mr C. WOOD said that as yet he had received no further information from India than had appeared in the papers; he had, however, no doubt of the truth of the report that the finances of India would admit of a considerable reduction in the duties upon imports.

Mr. VILLIERS said that the Government were painfully alive to the necessities of the case, and he had felt it his duty to warn his colleagues that if the war in the United States was prolonged, a great amount of distress in the manufacturing districts might be expected. He had also issued a circular to the Boards of Guardians urging them to take measures to be provided for such an emergency. The answers which he received were most satisfactory, and he was satisfied from the time of the general majority of them that they felt themselves prepared to meet any emergency by the ordinary processes. He did not wish to mislead, or by underrating the amount of distress, to encourage fallacious hopes for the future; but during the last weeks of April, the distress had decreased, but it might be owing to accidental and special causes.

In conclusion, he pointed out the necessity of a firm and prudent, but liberal and humane administration of the Poor law, and assured the House that the Poor Law Board would do all in its power to give advice and assistance to the local authorities to meet the distress which he was afraid would continue and become more severe.

Mr. BRIGHT thought that Government assistance would become necessary. He did not think that the Boards of Guardians could do all that was required. He urged the formation of local committees to collect subscriptions from the classes who could afford to assist their poorer neighbors, who were now struggling with difficulties. Where this had been done no pressure had been felt. No doubt there was less cotton coming from India, which was owing to the fear of the war with America; and he wished to warn the noble lord at the head of the Government that nothing was more prejudicial to the trade of Lancashire than hasty statements with respect to this war and the blockade. A statement of the noble lord, the Foreign Secretary, when he expressed a hope that in a few months the Northern States would allow the independence of the South had for the time paralyzed business in Lancashire by the sudden reduction it caused in the price of yarn. The Foreign Secretary was quite ignorant of the cause if he supposed the North would have consented to such a course. The trade was greatly unsettled by the reports spread abroad of the blockade being raised, for the prices were so high and so sensitive that a sudden change was ruin to a person engaged in large transactions. It was, therefore, highly culpable and a breach of neutrality in the Foreign Secretary to indulge in the remarks he had made.

Mr. RAILEY said he had personally witnessed the lamentable sufferings of the working classes, under distress brought upon them by no fault of their own, and the constancy and heroism with which they had borne them. He earnestly urged the Government to do all in its power to promote the cultivation of cotton in India and the colonies.

After some further remarks by sundry other members the subject dropped.

The London Times, in an editorial upon the debate relative to the distress in Lancashire, says: "It is, too, for the honor of the nation that all the world should know its sacrifices in the cause of neutrality. The cotton manufacture suffers only from a dearth of cotton. It will be supplied ere long, if not from America, from those other cotton fields which this emergency is calling into fertility. Till then, Lancashire is rich enough to do its duty, and a recent alteration of the Poor Law will prevent the distress from falling into excessive pressure upon small localities. The attention of Government, of the Legislature, of the whole nation, is upon the sufferers by this strange calamity, and if extraordinary and exceptional means should be required, they will be forthcoming."

The Times looks upon the new Slave-trade treaty as the first fruit of secession, and says it is not a blow at the South, but is a victory over the North. In the same article the Times says if the Northerners could only see their own interests, they would stop short now and treat, as they will probably never have so good an opportunity.

It was reported in Paris that the Emperor of China intends sending an Embassy Extraordinary to France and England.

The Paris correspondent of the Morning Herald says that nothing further has transpired respecting M. MERCIER's visit to Richmond, "but it is beyond question that the recognition of the Southern States is seriously contemplated by the French Government."

The Paris Presse states the object of Prince NAPOLEON's visit to Naples is to arrange about the remodelling of certain treaties between France and Italy.

The monthly returns of the Bank of France show an increase of the cash on hand of nearly 23,000,000 francs, and a decrease in the bills discounted not yet due of 74,500,000.

The Journal des Débats declares the present situation alike intolerable for Italy, the Pope and France, and says it must be brought to a speedy termination.

RUSSIA.

The Journal de St. Petersbourg publishes an Imperial ukase, ordering the State Bank to exchange notes for gold and silver, on and after the 13th inst. The price of specie is doubtless of bank notes is to be gradually reduced until it reaches the normal value. For the present gold half imperials are to be exchanged for 90 copecks, and the silver rouble for 110 copecks paper currency. In the month of August, the price of gold is to be 85 copecks, and that of silver 100 copecks. Further reductions in the price of bullion are to be announced by an imperial decree.

MADAGASCAR.

The Ami de la Religione says: "Important news has been received from Madagascar. An insurrection has broken out, and an attempt was made to assassinate the King. A cousin of the King, who is a pretender to the Crown, is compromised. His Majesty has had to be armed at the moment he was attacked, and he fired and killed the assassin. The incident had not discouraged the rebels, as at the last dates they were still under arms."

A Rebel Story About Gen. Butler.

Seizure of Money Intended to Pay Interest on Confederate Bonds.

CAIRO, Tuesday, May 20.

The Memphis Appeal of the 15th contains the following dispatch addressed to the rebel Secretary of State, dated Camp Moore, 11th:

"Gen. BUTLER yesterday took forcible possession of the office of the Consul of the Netherlands, searched the person of the Consul, and took from him the key of a bank-vault, in which were $800,000, transferred by the Citizen's Bank to Hope's Bank of Amsterdam, intended for the payment of the interest on the Confederate bonds. Gen. BUTLER also took possession of the offices of the French and Spanish Consulates in the old Canal Bank, and placed a guard there. He also seized the Canal Bank and South Bank, and has issued an inflammatory proclamation to incite the poor against the rich, promising to distribute to the poor a thousand barrels of beef and sugar, captured in New-Orleans. He is recruiting in New-Orleans. The poor will soon be starved. The enemy have sent a force up to Bonne Carre, which marched through the swamps and destroyed the railroad bridge."

The dispatch is not signed.

The Vicksburgh Citizen, of the 12th, says that the latest we can learn of the gunboats below is that they are between Fort Adams and Bayou Tunica, supposed to be in or about the Red River cut-off.

REBEL REPORTS OF RECENT BATTLES.

THE VICTORY NEAR CORINTH.

RICHMOND, May 10.—The War Office has received the following official dispatch:

CORINTH, May 9, via MOBILE, May 10.

To Gen. S. Cooper, Adjutant-General:

We attacked the enemy to-day, and drove him from his position. (Signed.) G. T. BEAUREGARD.

CORINTH, May 8.—BRAGG and VAN DORN advanced on the enemy at 11 o'clock this morning. After a sharp skirmish, which lasted three hours, we drove the enemy two miles beyond Farmington, and beyond the bridge. Five thousand troops were engaged on each side. The Federal cavalry charged Hoomer's Battery, but were repulsed in great confusion, their riderless horses running to our line. Our loss was small. Maj. INGRAHAM and Capt. LEEWINOR, of Gen. VAN DORN's Staff, were dangerously wounded. We captured a large amount of clothing and knapsacks. The enemy's loss in killed and wounded was heavy.

MAY 9.—I have just returned from the front. The enemy was driven across Seven Mile Creek, running like sheep. It appears that Gen. POPE's Division of the Federal army alone occupied Farmington. Gen. HALLECK, with the main part of the army, is still on the river. The Confederate loss is slight. The Federal retreat was so rapid that we were unable to capture many prisoners. Gens. PRICE and VAN DORN led the attack. We captured the telegraph office at Farmington. The Confederates are returning to Corinth. It is reported that the Confederate forces operating down the Tennessee River have captured large numbers of prisoners and a large amount of property at Paris and Paducah.

JACKSON'S VICTORY IN THE VALLEY OF VIRGINIA.

RICHMOND, May 10.—The following official dispatch was received at the War Office this morning:

VALLEY DISTRICT, May 9, (via STAUNTON, May 10.)

To Gen. S. Cooper, Adjutant-General:

God blessed our arms with victory at McDowell's yesterday. (Signed) T. J. JACKSON, Major-General.

A dispatch to Gov. LETCHER, this morning, says that Gen. JACKSON telegraphs that we have gained a brilliant victory in the valley, and that the enemy is in full flight, body pursued. Our loss is 60 killed, and 300 wounded. The enemy's loss was heavy, and all his dead and wounded were left upon the field. Of the Twelfth Georgia Regiment, Capts. FLEMOY, MCMILLAN, and PATTERSON, Liets. TYLER, GOODWYNE, and WOODWARD, were killed. Capt. DAVIES was badly wounded.

MAY 11.—A later dispatch to Gov. LETCHER, dated Staunton, Saturday evening, says that the enemy's loss at McDowell was 680 killed and wounded. In their flight, the Yankee troops burned all their baggage and wagons. Our forces are pursuing them closely. Some of our wounded have arrived here.

SUFFOLK, Va., April 10.—Norfolk and Portsmouth were evacuated this morning by the Confederate forces. The Gosport Navy-yard, with the gunboats Plymouth, Germantown and Raleigh, were completely destroyed by fire. All the cotton that could not be removed to a place of safety was also burned. The Dry Dock was effectively blown up in sections. The Merrimac is in the river, all safe.

Excitement Among the South About Flags of Truce—Completion of the Railroad Bridge—Confederate Loyalty, etc.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, May 20.

The correspondent of the TIMES with Gen. McDOWELL's army sends the following dispatch:

FALMOUTH, Va., Tuesday, May 20.

Considerable excitement has been created among the secession citizens of Fredericksburgh lately by the arrival of flags of truce. The report was circulated that the bearers came to warn the National soldiers to give the women and children free passage from the town, as they intended to shell it. The flags of truce, however, merely pointed to some private matter—the passage of ladies who resided in Fredericksburgh through our lines. This was the ostensible object, though an interior one doubtless was to get key into Fredericksburgh. It was [illegible] [illegible] to-morrow to the Rebel Gens.
